MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

In the summer of 2015, Plaintiffs T.S. and Q.B. were pretrial detainees at the Cook County Juvenile Temporary Detention Center (“JTDC”). During three short intervals that summer, Defendant Twentieth Century Fox and other Fox entities (collectively, “Fox Defendants”) filmed scenes for the television show Empire at the JTDC. Plaintiffs allege that Empire filming disrupted the normal operations of the JTDC in ways that harmed them and other juvenile detainees. They further allege that Defendant Leonard Dixon (the Superintendent of the JTDC), and Cook County, Illinois (collectively, “County Defendants”), lacked a legitimate government purpose for imposing certain conditions of confinement to facilitate the filming. In this proposed class action, Plaintiffs assert claims under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 and various supplemental state law theories. See 28 U.S.C. §§ 1331, 1367(a). The court previously denied Plaintiffs’ motion for class certification without prejudice. T.S. v. Twentieth Century Fox Television, 334 F.R.D. 518, 541 (N.D. Ill. 2020).

Before the court are four motions: Plaintiffs’ motion to amend their complaint to add H.C. as a class representative [365], Plaintiffs’ renewed motion for class certification [351], the County Defendants’ motion for summary judgment [411], and the Fox Defendants’ motion for summary judgment [409]. For the reasons below, the court grants Plaintiffs’ motion to amend their complaint; grants in part and denies in part Plaintiffs' motion for class certification; and grants in part and denies in part Defendants' respective motions for summary judgment. Because the court grants summary judgment with respect to Plaintiffs' constitutional claims, the only remaining claims arise under state law. In light of this case's long procedural history and the substantial expenditure of judicial resources, the court will exercise its discretion to retain jurisdiction of the remaining claims. See, e.g., Timm v. Mead Corp., 32 F.3d 273, 276–77 (7th Cir. 1994) (upholding district court's retention of jurisdiction over state claims after granting summary judgment on only federal claim in the case).

BACKGROUND

The JTDC is a five-story juvenile detention facility in Cook County, Illinois that housed more than 300 youth in the summer of 2015. (Defs.' SOF [415] ¶ 1; PSOAF [421-3] ¶¶ 1–2.) These detainees were awaiting trial or other court proceedings and typically remained at the JTDC for around 10 days, though some stayed far longer. (Pls.' Ex. 10 [422-10] (hereinafter "Kraus Rpt."), ¶ 20). There is conflicting evidence on the range of detainee ages, but the parties agree that no detainee was younger than 12 or older than 21. (Compare Pls.' Ex. 4 [422-4] (hereinafter "Dunlap Rpt.") ¶ 27, with Defs.' Ex. 3 [412-3] (hereinafter "Klemke Dep."), at 22:16–24.) Detainees at the JTDC live in units called "pods" which contain rooms for individual residents that open to an enclosed common area. (PSOAF ¶ 1.)

1. Fox and the JTDC

In May 2015, the Fox Defendants were looking for a prison-related backdrop for two episodes of Empire, a television show set in New York City but filmed in Chicago. (See PSOAF ¶ 12; Fox Summ. J. Mot. [410] at 9.) Fox's "location scout" Jonathan Klemke was part of the team that first came across the JTDC. (Klemke Dep. at 19:3–5.) Klemke testified that a friend found the JTDC on Google Maps and recommended he look into it. (Id. at 19:6–19.) Klemke "follow[ed] up on” the recommendation by “call[ing] and g[etting] in touch with” Dixon. (Id.) Dixon expressed interest, and Klemke drove over to the JTDC to meet with him that same day. (Id. at 23:18–24:3.)

Once at the JTDC, Klemke toured portions of the facility; the extent of the tour is not clear from the record. (Klemke Dep. at 27:18–24, 81:19–82:12.) Klemke took photos, including two pictures of the outdoor yard that appear to be taken from a window on the fourth or fifth floor of the facility.¹ (Defs.’ Resp. to PSOAF [430] (hereinafter “Resp. to PSOAF”), ¶ 18; Pls.’ Ex. 19 [422-19]; Pls.’ Ex. 20 [422-20].) At some point during the tour, Klemke saw groups of 15 to 20 detainees being transported in the hallways but did not know why they were moving about the hallways at the time. (Klemke Dep. at 25:11–26:2, 69:8–11.) Klemke saw that the classrooms on the second floor were empty during his tour. (Id. at 69:17–70:12.) He was surprised the classrooms were empty, but he testified that Dixon explained the kids at the JTDC were “off during the summer.” (Id.) Dixon himself testified that there is summer school at the JTDC, and, thus, he “couldn’t have told [Klemke] school was out for the entire summer” (Defs.’ Ex. 5 [412-5] (hereinafter “Dixon Dep.”) at 71:8–19.)

Klemke admitted that, based on his tour, he understood that the yards were the only place that the detainees could go outdoors. (Klemke Dep. at 110:1–14.) Klemke testified, however, that Dixon told him there were alternative indoor locations that would allow the detainees to exercise. (Id. at 109:1–12.) Likewise, Klemke testified that Dixon assured him that visitors only use the visitation room “on certain days and that we would be able to use the [visitation] room on off days.” (Id. at 100:24–101:9.) At the time, Klemke raised these questions because “part of the initial scouting is to determine whether a facility can continue its operation while also accommodating a film crew.” (Id. at 103:23–104:18.) Klemke testified that he did not “really know about running a prison,” so he trusted the JTDC to ensure that “filming at the detention center [did not] interfere[] with the day-to-day existence of the juveniles held there” (Id. at 67:8–68:7.)

On June 2, 2015, five days later, Klemke emailed Dixon to follow up on their visit. (Pls.’ Ex. 16 [422-16] (hereinafter “Klemke Follow-up Email”).) Klemke explained that if filming were to proceed at the JTDC, Fox would want to use “a pod, the yard, the medical center, and the visitation room.” (Id.) Fox expected to make “extensive use of several parts of the facility over the course of two days or so,” likely for about 12 hours per day. (Id.) Klemke wrote that Fox could “attempt to limit the personnel in the facility to only the most essential,” dropping their numbers from the usual 80 crew members to “closer to 30 people total.” (Id.) And “the two largest segments of filming would be in the visitation room and the yard, which hopefully makes our presence less of an impact.” (Id.) Klemke noted, “Obviously your schedule would take precedence over ours, and we would discuss a way of making sure that we don’t interfere with your day to day operations too badly.” (Id.) When asked why he made that offer, Klemke testified, “My intention in writing that was to give Superintendent Dixon an opportunity to tell me that he wasn’t comfortable with the things that I had suggested.” (Klemke Dep. at 36:19–37:8.) Klemke explained that his understanding was that “a film crew would not be normal but [would] not necessarily [be] a hindrance.” (Id. at 36:8–17.)

On June 5, 2015, Klemke forwarded this email to his supervisor Brady Breen, Fox’s Location Manager. (Klemke Follow-up Email.) Over the next couple of weeks, Breen toured the JTDC, as did creator of Empire Lee Daniels and other members of the Empire production team. (Defs.’ Ex. 7 [412-7]; Defs.’ Ex. 8 [412-8].) Daniels testified that his tour did not include any of the indoor gyms or other recreational areas. (Defs.’ Ex. 2 [412-2] (hereinafter “Daniels Dep.”), at 93:7–11.) The parties point to little other evidence concerning these tours.

On June 12, 2015, Breen emailed Dixon’s assistant, Yvonne Akins, formally requesting permission to film at the JTDC. (Defs.’ Ex. 8.) On June 17, Dixon, Akins, and JTDC’s Acting Project Director Gene Robinson met with Breen and other Fox representatives to discuss the logistics of Fox's plan to film. (Defs.' Ex. 12 [412-12] (hereinafter "Akins Dep.") at 21:22–25:10; Defs.' Ex. 7.) There was no discussion about "any changes to the schedules of residents that would need to occur in order to facilitate the filming." (Akins Dep. at 25:6–10.) Breen explained that "there was a lot of conversation about how can we accomplish the work that we want to accomplish and be respectful of what's going on in the building, and those guidelines were set very clearly by the team that works at . . . the juvenile detention facility." (Defs.' Ex. 4 [412-4] (hereinafter "Breen Dep.") at 111:7–21.)

On June 18, 2015, Breen and Cook County's Director of Real Estate Management Anna Ashcraft signed a contract to allow Fox to film at the JTDC. (Defs.' Ex. 1 [412-1] (hereinafter "Location Agreement").) The Location Agreement would allow Fox to film in the visitation room, exercise yard, medical office, living pod, and hallways and lobby areas each day from Monday, June 22, 2015 to Friday, June 26, 2015 at a cost of $1,500 per day, payable to the Cook County Real Estate Management Division. (Id.) Paragraph 1(D) of the agreement read as follows:

[Fox] acknowledges that the [JTDC] is a functioning Municipal Building, operating as a residential facility for juveniles. [Fox] will cooperate with the County, JTDC Administration, and Security . . . so that normal operations of the Building and its occupants, and access by the public, are not disrupted in any manner whatsoever.

(Id.) Although Daniels testified that he personally was not aware of Paragraph 1(D) (Daniels Dep. at 95:8–25), he also testified that no one ever told him that Fox's presence had the potential to have a negative impact on the detainees, and "in choosing to film at JTDC," he "assumed that the residents of JTDC would be treated with respect." (Id. at 96:19–22, 127:16–20.) The agreement also allowed Fox to return to JTDC to film additional scenes or retakes within a reasonable time so long as Fox provided notice. (Location Agreement ¶ 5.) Later, Fox and the JTDC would sign two addenda to the Location Agreement: one on July 7, 2015, allowing Fox to return to the JTDC to continue filming from July 13 to July 16 and another on August 14, 2015, allowing Fox to return from August 23 to August 25. (Defs.' Ex. 13 [412-13] (hereinafter "July Addendum"); Defs.' Ex.

14 [412-14] (hereinafter “August Addendum”).) The other language from the Location Agreement applied to the addenda as well. (Defs.’ Ex. 11 [412-11] (hereinafter “Kruzel Dep.”) at 54:9–18.)

After signing the Location Agreement, the parties continued their discussions. JTDC General Counsel Zenaida Alonzo worked with Dixon to tell Fox “what areas [JTDC] could put off for filming and . . . still meet the requirements for the kids.” (Defs.’ Ex. 42 [412-42] (hereinafter “Alonzo Dep.”) at 12:13–13:23, 27:17–29:21.) For example, Fox had initially wanted to film in the infirmary. (Location Agreement ¶ 1(A).) Alonzo emailed Breen on June 30, 2015, however, telling him that “JTDC cannot accommodate any filming [in our infirmary]” because “we have federal standards that we have to comply with and this would impact our ability to provide medical care for our residents.” (Defs.’ Ex. 45 [412-45] at 2–4.) When asked how much equipment Fox would need to store at the JTDC while filming, Breen responded, “Imagine if we emptied a semi trailer filled to the roof.” (Defs.’ Ex. 20 [412-20] at 2.) JTDC agreed to allow Fox to use Pod 3B for filming and Pod 3A to store their equipment, though Breen had suggested Fox could store the equipment under tarps in the outdoor yard if necessary. (Id. at 2–4.) Pods 3A and 3B are ordinarily “Alpha” intake pods, where new detainees are screened and assessed upon admission, but JTDC agreed to clear out these two pods during filming. (Resp. to PSOAF ¶ 29; see Pls.’ Ex. 66 [422-66]; Defs.’ Ex. 20.)

2. Filming

Fox filmed at JTDC from June 22 to 26, from July 13 to 16, and from August 23 to 25. (Location Agreement; July Addendum; August Addendum.) During that time, Fox occupied, in some capacity, the library, Pods 3A and 3B, the outdoor yards, the chapel, and several classrooms. (Resp. to PSOAF ¶¶ 28–30.) Each of these rooms is located on the second or third floor of the JTDC building. (Resp. to PSOAF ¶¶ 4–5; see Pls.’ Ex. 2 [422-2] at 3–4.)

Fox brought more than 150 people into the JTDC on at least four days and more than 200 people on at least one day. (Pls.’ Ex. 27 [422-27] (hereinafter “July 31 Robinson Email”) at 3.)

But Plaintiffs have identified no evidence that the presence of the additional crew members by itself resulted in any additional restrictions on the JTDC detainees. Breen understood that, despite Fox's presence, JTDC staff "had made accommodations to make sure that normal operations [of the JTDC] should continue." (Pls.' Resp. to Defs.' SOF [421-2] (hereinafter "Resp. to SOF") ¶ 87.) Breen explained that, while filming, Fox had "consistent conversations about, 'Yes, you can be here, no, you can't be here, these are the times at which we can do these things.'" (Breen Dep. at 80:1-8.) There were "certainly numerous situations where [Fox wasn't] able to do things that [they] wanted to do because of the . . . staff telling [Breen], you know, we can't do that right now, we can't do this right now because of the sensitivities of the location" (Id. at 146:22-147:6.) For example, Breen testified that there were "many times" when "traffic from the lunch area to the third floor where the pods were was restricted" during filming in order to "protect the kids." (Id. at 148:12-20.)

Outdoor Yards. Detainees at the JTDC ordinarily get some form of Large Muscle Exercise ("LME") every day. (Pls.' Ex. 43 [422-43] (hereinafter "Taylor Decl."), ¶ 13(c).) While the parties do not define LME, the court presumes it includes active play such as running around, working out, or playing sports. The JTDC has a large open-air courtyard on its third floor which is split into three adjoining yards and serves as the jail's only venue for outdoor recreation. (Resp. to PSOAF ¶ 4.) A rotating schedule determines each day whether detainees in a given pod will exercise in the outdoor yards or in indoor gyms on the first floor of the JTDC. (Taylor Decl. ¶ 13(c); Pls.' Ex. 49 [422-49]; Resp. to PSOAF ¶ 6.) No pod was scheduled to be outside every day that summer. (Pls.' Ex. 49.) JTDC would sometimes prohibit detainees from participating in off-pod exercise as a form of discipline or to accommodate a staff shortage. (Taylor Decl. ¶ 13(c)(iv).) In fact, JTDC Deputy Executive Director William Steward testified that "[l]arge muscle exercise is done on pod quite a bit," and "[i]t doesn't matter where the exercise occurs as long as they get it . . . [and get it] with the proper staff.” (Defs.’ Ex. 17 [412-17] (hereinafter “Steward Dep.”), at 233:14–234:1, 235:5–10; see also Defs.’ Ex. 56 [412-56] at 12 (Aug. 10), 13–14 (Aug. 17).)

Fox planned to spend substantial time filming in the outdoor yards. (Klemke Follow-up Email.) JTDC closed off the yards each time Fox came to film, and the yards remained closed on the day after at least the June and July sessions so that JTDC could clean and “thorough[ly] search” the yards. (Taylor Decl. ¶ 17; Pls.’ Ex. 34 [422-34]; Pls.’ Ex. 36 [422-36].) Although the indoor gyms remained open, the closure of the outdoor yards meant there were not enough off-pod spaces and time slots for every pod to use, so residents in many pods received their daily LME activity within their pods while Fox was filming. (Taylor Decl. ¶ 18; July 31 Robinson Email at 3.) One detainee filed a grievance (not signed or dated, but referred to by Plaintiffs as the “June 2015 Resident Grievance”), complaining, “We need RECK. We haven’t had Reck in days. Fuck the empire. Just cause there [sic] here doesn’t mean we don’t gotta have reck.” (Pls.’ Ex. 57 [422-57].) Plaintiffs have identified no evidence that anyone at Fox knew that detainees were forced to exercise on their pods during Fox’s visit.

Classrooms. The JTDC also houses the Nancy B. Jefferson School, which is part of the Chicago Public School system and serves detainees year-round with breaks in June and August. (Resp. to PSOAF ¶ 33; Fox Summ. J. Mot. at 17.) The school’s classrooms are located on the second floor of the JTDC and are used for classes, after-school programming, recreation, and commissary. (Dunlap Rpt. ¶ 67.) On normal school days, JTDC staff transport detainees from their pods to the second-floor classrooms. (Taylor Decl. ¶ 13(a).) Although Fox never filmed in the classrooms, the JTDC allowed Fox to use classrooms to store equipment and give the crew a place to rest. (Resp. to SOF ¶¶ 21–22.) During Fox’s June and August filming dates, the school was on summer break. (Resp. to SOF ¶ 42.) During the July filming session, however, Fox occupied classrooms during three scheduled days of school. (Id. ¶¶ 41–43.)

On those three days in July, detainees remained in their pods for school, and teachers travelled to the individual pods to instruct the students. (Id. ¶ 43.) T.S., one of the named plaintiffs in this case, had school instruction in his pod for one or two of the three affected July days.² He testified that, during filming, many of his teachers did not show up, and those that did show up arrived late and left early, while the detainees just “continued to play cards and watch TV . . . [until] it was time for [the teacher] to roll off.” (Defs.’ Ex. 22 [412-22] (hereinafter “T.S. Dep.”) at 30:4–31:21, 32:18–33:24.) Kenya Taylor, who then worked at JTDC as a Youth Development Specialist, stated, “It was harder to maintain discipline during school because there were more distractions and temptations on the pods (televisions, rooms and beds).” (Taylor Decl. ¶¶ 1, 3, 21.) JTDC detainees had taken classes in their pods on previous occasions, for example when guests such as Congressman John Lewis had come to speak at the facility. (Defs.’ Updated Ex. 17 [431-2] at 129:23–130:24.) Earl Dunlap, the JTDC’s former Transitional Administrator, testified that in another instance, JTDC’s administration had decided to switch to on-pod schooling due to a safety issue.³ (Defs.’ Ex. 60 [431-7] (hereinafter “May Dunlap Dep.”) at 27:4–10.) Plaintiff’s psychiatric expert Dr. Louis Kraus⁴ testified that while, in general, missing “a week of school here or there” is “likely not going to have a long-term impact on your general educational needs,” and “[o]ne or two days may not impact the general education,” such disruptions “may impact the youth for other reasons.” (Defs.’ Ex. 53 [412-53] (hereinafter “Kraus Dep.”) at 58:4–59:4.) Dr. Kraus

² T.S. testified that, on July 14, he left the jail to appear in court. (T.S. Dep. at 136:1–24.) Defendants’ Local Rule 56.1 statement claims that T.S. was confined to his individual cell for a disciplinary violation on July 15, but they have cited no evidence in the record to support that statement. (Resp. to SOF ¶ 47.)

did not specify what those “other reasons” are. Plaintiffs have provided no evidence that Fox knew that school was in session during the July filming session.

The second-floor classrooms, and other second-floor areas such as the library, are also ordinarily used for after-school programming such as “Free Write” and nutrition education. (Resp. to SOAF ¶ 37; Pls.’ Ex. 60 [422-60]; Pls.’ Ex. 62 [422-62]; Buckingham Dep, Ex. E to Defs.’ Class Cert. Mot. [248-5] at 54:1–11.) During the weeks when Fox was filming, the JTDC postponed or cancelled a number of these programs. (Resp. to SOF ¶ 44.) The JTDC also eliminated or postponed some commissary visits to the second-floor classrooms during filming. (Resp. to PSOAF ¶ 39.) “Commissary” involved opportunities to buy snacks, as well as activities like ping pong and video games. (PSOAF ¶ 39.) Not all commissary visits were cancelled, however. (Def.’ Ex. 62 [431-9] at 2 (noting that on June 23, 2015, JTDC employees “escorted residents to classroom 319 for commissary”).) Again, there is no evidence that anyone at Fox knew that the JTDC cancelled any programs or commissary visits to accommodate filming.

Visitation room. JTDC typically dedicates a room on the second floor for detainees to meet visitors such as parents or grandparents. (Resp. to PSOAF ¶ 11.) That room is 1302 square feet and contains twelve tables. (Id.; Def.’ Ex. 35 [412-35] (hereinafter “Robinson Decl.”) ¶ 4.) Fox filmed in this visitation room on at least some of its days at the JTDC. (Resp. to PSOAF ¶ 30.) Visitation continued on every day of filming; JTDC used classrooms as a substitute visitation area. (Resp. to SOF ¶¶ 65, 70; July 31 Robinson Email at 3.) The substitute visitation area was somewhat smaller: it was just 1148 square feet and could accommodate just eight visitors at a time instead of twelve. (Robinson Decl. ¶ 6; Pls.’ Ex. 47 [422-47] at 2, 7.) Robinson testified that he “personally designed the table arrangement [in the substitute room] . . . to ensure that visitors had space and privacy consistent with” the regular visitation space. (Robinson Decl. ¶ 6.) Nonetheless, two detainees testified that they felt there was less privacy during their visits in the alternate locations. (T.S. Dep. 43:14–44:5; Def.’ Ex. 21 [412-21] (hereinafter “Q.B. Dep.”)) at 64:3–14.) It is undisputed that “[t]here is no evidence that [Fox] knew or had reason to know that the JTDC had moved visitation to a classroom, . . . the dimensions or layout of that [classroom], or the impact that the shift may have had . . . if any.” (Resp. to SOF ¶ 67.)

Intake. Fox also used Pod 3A for storage and Pod 3B for filming. (Defs.’ Ex. 20 at 2–4.) As noted, these pods ordinarily serve as two of three “Alpha” intake pods, where the JTDC screens and assesses new detainees upon admission. (Resp. to PSOAF ¶ 29.) During Fox’s visits, the JTDC transferred detainees housed in Pods 3A and 3B to other pods. (Pls.’ Ex. 66.) At least 14 residents in Pod 3A were transferred to other pods. (Id.) This forced the JTDC to “fill up” other pods “with 15 and 16 residents each.” (Id.) While each JTDC pod was built to hold either 18 or 16 occupants, for safety reasons the JTDC’s written policies limit the functional operating capacity of each pod to 14 or 12 occupants, respectively. (Pls.’ Ex. 67 [422-67] Part IV(a).) Plaintiffs’ experts, Mr. Dunlap and Dr. Kraus, stated in their reports that such overcrowding put the detainees’ safety at risk. (Dunlap Rpt. ¶¶ 53, 57–58; Kraus Rpt. ¶ 38.) Although occupancy in certain pods regularly exceeded functional capacity independent of the Empire filming, the days in June when Fox filmed saw a significant increase in the number of pods that exceeded their functional capacity. (Compare Defs.’ Ex. 37 [412-37] (hereinafter “Pod Populations”), at 1–20, with id. at 21–26.) Plaintiffs have identified no evidence that the JTDC informed Fox that its use of Pods 3A and 3B would force JTDC to overpopulate other pods.

General harms. Dr. Kraus opined that forcing child-detainees to remain in their pods with fewer activities magnifies the psychological harm associated with keeping children in a detention center. (Kraus Rpt. ¶ 30(a)–(b).) JTDC’s current director of mental health, Dr. Brian Conant, agreed. (Pls.’ Ex. 11 [422-11] at 177:15–178:7; see also Dunlap Rpt. ¶¶ 9, 65–67.) Taylor, the Youth Development Specialist, noticed that during filming, the detainees on her pods felt “cooped up” and “there was a feeling of more tension, stress and anxiety on the pods where [she] worked.” (Taylor Decl. ¶ 22.)

Alonzo, in her capacity as the JTDC's Rule 30(b)(6) witness,⁵ testified that nobody at JTDC "notif[ied] Twentieth Century Fox Television that it was disrupting the normal operations of the JTDC." (Defs.' Ex. 6 [412-6] at 86:12–15.)

3. T.S, Q.B., and H.C.

Plaintiffs have presented three representatives of the putative class: T.S., Q.B., and H.C.⁶ Each is a former resident of the JTDC and was detained at the JTDC on some of the days in June, July, and August 2015 when Fox filmed Empire. (Resp. to SOF ¶¶ 1–2.)

T.S. T.S. resided at the JTDC from December 3, 2014 until September 24, 2015. (Id. ¶ 37.) While Fox was filming, T.S. recalls multiple days when JTDC provided no off-pod exercise and instead brought recreation specialists to the pods to engage the detainees in minimal exercise activities, such as twenty jumping jacks. (Pls.' Ex. 106 [422-106] (hereinafter "T.S. Interrog."), ¶ 13.) T.S. also missed a Free Write session—and possibly a parenting class—that were cancelled due to Fox's presence. (Resp. to PSOAF ¶ 10(a); T.S. Interrog. ¶¶ 19–21.) Due to Fox's presence at the JTDC, T.S. had school classes in his pod for one or two days during the July filming period. (T.S. Interrog. ¶ 15.) Finally, T.S.'s mother visited him in the "less private" setting of the substitute visitation room, and her visit with him was shorter than usual. (Id. ¶ 16.)

Q.B. Q.B. resided at the JTDC during the June and August filming sessions. (Resp. to SOF ¶ 38.) Q.B. also had recreation on his pod for at least one day. (Pls.' Ex. 105 [422-105] ¶ 13.) On one of the days that Fox was filming, Q.B.'s grandmother attempted to visit him but was turned away. (Resp. to PSOAF ¶ 10(b).) Defendants dispute Plaintiffs' suggestion that

Q.B.'s grandmother's inability to visit with Q.B. had anything to do with the number of tables available, and, indeed, Plaintiffs fail to cite any evidence that supports this claim. (Id.)

H.C. H.C. resided at the JTDC from May 2015 to June 2016. (Resp. to SOF ¶ 39.) H.C. had recreation on his pod for at least one day during the filming (Pls.' Ex. 107 [422-107] (hereinafter "H.C. Interrog."), ¶ 10), and missed a Free Write session that was cancelled due to Fox's presence. (Resp. to PSOAF ¶ 10(c).) Like T.S., H.C. was in court on one of the three days that Fox filmed in July but had school on his pod for at least one day. (Resp. to SOF ¶ 46; H.C. Interrog. ¶ 8.) It is undisputed that H.C. did not leave his pod for at least one 24-hour period during Fox's filming, but the parties disagree as to why.⁷ (Resp. to PSOAF ¶ 10(c).)

4. Dixon's involvement

Dixon testified that he agreed to allow Fox to film Empire at the JTDC for a number of reasons. He felt it "would be good for the kids," "would create a certain energy in the facility," and would give everyone a "chance to see the actors." (Dixon Dep. at 111:23–112:8.) The only scheduled interaction between the detainees and the actors was a meeting in which actor Chris Rock spoke to a group of approximately 24 detainees for about 30 minutes during the June filming. (Resp. to PSOAF ¶ 47.) Terrence Howard also met with some of the detainees after filming concluded and later returned to the facility to develop a "book club." (Dixon Dep. at 205:19–207:11.) After the June filming session, a letter from the JTDC's Division of Resident Advocacy & Quality of Life to JTDC administrator Millicent McCoy commented on the effects of Empire's visit, and identified a number of benefits from the filming, including "excited-happy-enthusiastic staff," "elevated energy level," and increased staff interaction. (Pls.' Ex. 51 [422-51] (hereinafter "Resident Advocacy Letter"), at 2–3.) A July 31 email from the Acting Project Director Robinson listed similar benefits. (July 31 Robinson Email at 4.) Both communications, however, also listed

a number of negative effects of the filming, including interruptions to school, recreation, and intake (id.), as well as the fact that residents did not have the opportunity to “burn off some of their energy” in the school area and yards during the first week of their June summer break. (Resident Advocacy Letter at 2.)

Dixon, for his part, invited his wife to the filming and directed Akins to ask Breen to bring the actors to Dixon’s office for photos before the shoot. (Resp. to PSOAF ¶ 49.) Dixon was photographed with many of the Empire stars. (Id. ¶ 52.) When Fox asked to return to film in August, Dixon’s assistant said, “[I]f Dixon approve[s] this [Breen] will need to get Dixon a directors [sic] chair.” (Pls.’ Ex. 86 [422-86].) Breen did have such a chair made and gave it to Dixon. (Resp. to PSOAF ¶ 53.)

On July 15, 2015, Dixon received an email from Professor Thomas Geraghty concerning the conditions imposed on the JTDC detainees during Empire filming. (Pls.’ Ex. 90 [422-90] at 9.) At the time, the JTDC was subject to monitoring under the ruling in Doe v. Cook County, No. 99-cv-3945, Dkt. No. 786 (N.D. Ill. May 15, 2015). In Doe, Judge Holderman appointed Dunlap to monitor the JTDC as a “Court Appointed Expert” and imposed a three-month observation period on the JTDC from May 20, 2015 to August 20, 2015. Id. at 1–2. In the July 15, 2015 email, Geraghty raised concerns that, in light of the Empire filming, the JTDC might be, among other things, putting juvenile detainees on lockdown. (Pls.’ Ex. 90 [422-90] at 9.) Dixon responded by assuring Geraghty that the Empire filming had “no impact on regular programming for our kids other than changing the locations of some programs and visits.” (Id. at 4.)

On August 7, Breen reached out to Dixon to propose that Fox return on August 12 for a third session of filming. (Pls.’ Ex. 93 [422-93] at 2–3.) When Dixon forwarded the request to Alonzo, Alonzo replied, “I don’t advise having them come before the Doe party meeting on 8/20,” to which Dixon responded, “Agreed.” (Id.) August 20, 2015 was the date that Judge Holderman had set for terminating the court-imposed monitoring of the JTDC. (Dunlap Rpt. ¶ 22; Doe, No.

99-cv-3945, Dkt. No. 786 at 1.) Alonzo denied any nefarious purpose for this advice, testifying that it simply would have been “burdensome” to accommodate filming while preparing for the Doe meeting because of the “time, effort, [and] preparation for the Doe meeting” and “just having a lot of people on site.” (Defs.’ Updated Ex. 42 [431-4] at 91:12–93:6.)

5. Procedural history

Plaintiffs T.S. and Q.B. filed this lawsuit on behalf of themselves and others similarly situated on August 24, 2016. They asserted constitutional and state-law claims against the Fox entities, Cook County, Dixon, and numerous John Does. The case was assigned to the Honorable Amy J. St. Eve. On October 5, 2016, Plaintiffs filed their First Amended Class Action Complaint (“FAC”) [23]. The FAC added a Defendant: the Chief Judge of the Circuit Court of Cook County, in his official capacity (hereinafter the “Chief Judge”). The court later granted in part and denied in part Defendants’ Rule 12(b)(6) motions to dismiss. See T.S. v. Twentieth Century Fox Television, No. 16 C 8303, 2017 WL 1425596 (N.D. Ill. Apr. 20, 2017). Plaintiffs filed a Second Amended Class Action Complaint (“SAC”) [88] on May 23, 2017. The Fox Defendants filed a second Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss, which the court granted in part and denied in part. See T.S. v. Twentieth Century Fox Television, No. 16 C 8303, 2017 WL 4620841 (N.D. Ill. Oct. 17, 2017).

The following claims from the SAC moved forward: a claim for violation of the Fourteenth Amendment’s due process clause, asserted under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 against Dixon, Cook County, and the Chief Judge (Count I); a state-law claim for breach of fiduciary duty against Dixon (Count VII); a state-law claim for inducement of breach of fiduciary duty against the Fox Defendants (Count VIII); a state-law claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress against Dixon, Cook County, and the Chief Judge (Count IX); and a state-law claim for unjust enrichment against the

Fox Defendants (Count XIII).⁸ Two remaining counts do not set forth independent claims but allege theories for holding Cook County liable for the acts of its agents: a state-law respondeat superior claim (Count XI), and a state-law claim for indemnification against Cook County (Count XII).⁹

On May 23, 2018, the case was reassigned to this court after Judge St. Eve was confirmed to the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit. On January 16, 2020, the court denied without prejudice Defendants' motion to strike the class allegations [215] and Plaintiffs' motion for class certification [235]. See T.S. v. Twentieth Century Fox Television, 334 F.R.D. 518 (N.D. Ill. 2020). As discussed in more detail below, the court determined that although some of Plaintiffs' claims may be amenable to class treatment, the proposed class definition was overbroad. See id. at 525.

Later, on cross-motions for partial summary judgment, the court determined that the Chief Judge is entitled to Eleventh Amendment immunity because he acts on behalf of the State of Illinois, rather than Cook County, in his administrative role with respect to the JTDC. See T.S. v. Twentieth Century Fox Television, No. 16 C 8303, ___ F. Supp. 3d ___, 2020 WL 6870809, at *3 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 23, 2020). Therefore, the court granted the Chief Judge's motion for summary judgment on all claims against him. See id. Further, based on the parties' stipulation, the court granted summary judgment in favor of Plaintiff's claim that Defendant Dixon was the Chief Judge's final decisionmaker with respect to the Empire filming. See id. at *2.

⁸ In the SAC, Plaintiffs asserted a claim against Cook County and/or the Chief Judge for liability under Monell v. Dep't of Soc. Servs. of City of New York, 436 U.S. 658 (1978). Plaintiffs withdrew that claim in their brief opposing summary judgment (see Pls.' Br. in Opp'n to Mot. for Summ. J. ("Pls.' Opp'n") [421-1] at 50 n.10), so the court dismisses it with prejudice. The court also notes that the SAC (and the proposed Third Amended Complaint) asserts Counts VII and VIII against Doe Defendants. The time for identifying and serving the Doe Defendants passed long ago. See FED. R. CIV. P. 4(m). Therefore, the court assumes that the Plaintiffs are not pursuing any claims against those Defendants and dismisses them without prejudice. See id.

DISCUSSION

Summary judgment is appropriate if the moving party shows that there is no genuine dispute of material fact and that the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. FED. R. CIV. P. 56(a). A fact is material if it might affect the outcome of the suit under governing law, and a dispute is genuine if “the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party.” Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248 (1986). In ruling on a motion for summary judgment, the court construes all facts and draws all reasonable inferences in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. Anderson, 477 U.S. at 248; Lopez v. Sheriff of Cook Cnty., 993 F.3d 981, 984 (7th Cir. 2021).

Under Rule 23, a proposed class must satisfy four threshold requirements: numerosity, commonality, typicality, and adequacy of representation. FED. R. CIV. P. 23(a). The class must then meet the requirements of one of the categories of class actions in Rule 23(b). See Messner v. Northshore Univ. HealthSys., 669 F.3d 802, 811 (7th Cir. 2012). Plaintiffs seek certification of three classes under Rule 23(b)(3), which requires a showing that “questions of law or fact common to class members predominate over any questions affecting only individual members, and that a class action is superior to other available methods for fairly and efficiently adjudicating the controversy.” FED. R. CIV. P. 23(b)(3). Plaintiffs also seek to bring their unjust enrichment claims against the Fox Defendants under Rule 23(b)(1)(B), which is appropriate when “adjudications with respect to individual class members . . . would be dispositive of the interests of the other members not parties to the individual adjudications or would substantially impair or impede their ability to protect their interests.” FED. R. CIV. P. 23(b)(1)(B).

I. Conditions of Confinement Claims under § 1983

Defendants Cook County and Dixon have moved for summary judgment on Plaintiffs’ conditions of confinement claims under 42 U.S.C. § 1983. In the alternative, Defendant Dixon argues that qualified immunity applies. Because the merits of Plaintiffs' § 1983 claims are closely intertwined with the qualified immunity inquiry, the court addresses them together.

A. Merits

The Fourteenth Amendment's due process clause prohibits conditions of confinement that amount to punishment of pretrial detainees. Kingsley v. Hendrickson, 576 U.S. 389, 400 (2015) ("pretrial detainees (unlike convicted prisoners) cannot be punished at all"); Hardeman v. Curran, 933 F.3d 816, 821–22 (7th Cir. 2019).¹⁰ "[I]f a particular condition or restriction of pretrial detention is reasonably related to a legitimate governmental objective, it does not, without more, amount to 'punishment.'" Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 539 (1979). "Conversely, if a restriction or condition is not reasonably related to a legitimate goal—if it is arbitrary or purposeless—a court permissibly may infer that the purpose of the governmental action is punishment that may not constitutionally be inflicted upon detainees qua detainees." Id. A combination of conditions of confinement, "even if not individually serious enough to work constitutional violations, may violate the Constitution . . . when they have 'a mutually enforcing effect that produces the deprivation of a single, identifiable human need.'" Budd v. Motley, 711 F.3d 840, 842–43 (7th Cir. 2013) (quoting Wilson v. Seiter, 501 U.S. 294, 304 (1991)). In Kingsley v. Hendrickson, the Supreme Court clarified that "a pretrial detainee can prevail by providing only objective evidence that the challenged governmental action is not rationally related to a legitimate governmental objective or that it is excessive in relation to that purpose." Kingsley, 576 U.S. at 398 (emphases added). In other words, a pretrial detainee need not show evidence of a defendant's subjective intent to punish. Id. at 397–98.

Although Kingsley addressed conditions-of-confinement claims in the excessive force context, the Seventh Circuit has extended Kingsley's objective unreasonableness inquiry to "all Fourteenth Amendment conditions-of-confinement claims brought by pretrial detainees."

Hardeman, 933 F.3d at 823; see also Miranda v. Cnty. of Lake, 900 F.3d 335, 352 (7th Cir. 2018) (applying Kingsley to pretrial detainee’s claims of inadequate medical care). Courts must also consider whether the defendant acted purposefully, knowingly, or recklessly. See Kingsley, 576 U.S. at 396 (“[L]iability for negligently inflicted harm is categorically beneath the threshold of constitutional due process”) (emphasis in original).¹¹ Defendant Dixon does not dispute that he personally approved both the filming of Empire at the JTDC and operational changes that enabled the filming. Indeed, the parties previously stipulated that Dixon was the final decisionmaker with respect to “whether to permit the staging and filming of scenes for Empire at the [JTDC]” and “whether and how the JTDC’s operations would be altered in order to accommodate the Empire filming.” T.S., 2020 WL 6870809 at *2.

To survive summary judgment on their conditions-of-confinement claims, therefore, Plaintiffs must show a genuine dispute of material fact regarding whether the conditions at issue were “not rationally related to a legitimate governmental objective” or were “excessive in relation to that purpose.” Kingsley, 576 U.S. at 398. In Mulvania v. Sheriff of Rock Island Cnty., pretrial detainees challenged a jail’s policy requiring female detainees to wear either white underwear or no underwear at all. 850 F.3d 849, 852 (7th Cir. 2017). The Seventh Circuit reversed the district court’s grant of summary judgment for defendants, concluding that genuine disputes of material

Chief Judge Sykes’s concurrence draws upon the Eighth Amendment deliberate indifference standard for claims brought by convicted prisoners. See Hardeman, 933 F.3d at 827 (Sykes, J., concurring) (“only ‘objectively [and] sufficiently serious’ deprivations are actionable as a violation of the Constitution”) (quoting Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 834 (1994)). This court has previously quoted the Hardeman concurrence, see T.S., 334 F.R.D. at 529, 536, but acknowledges here that the Seventh Circuit has not yet held that “objectively serious” is a required element for all Fourteenth Amendment conditions-of-confinement claims.

fact as to whether the policy was rationally related to a government interest—or, even if it was rationally related, whether the policy was excessive in light of detainees’ dignitary interests—precluded summary judgment. Id. at 857–58.

Plaintiffs in this case have made a showing sufficient to survive summary judgment as well. They have identified facts suggesting that Dixon’s decision to allow Fox to film at the JTDC was not rationally related to a government purpose, or that the conditions imposed to facilitate the filming were excessive in light of that purpose. Dixon testified that he believed filming “would be good for the staff” and “good for the kids.” (Defs.’ SOF ¶ 26 (citing Dixon Dep. 112:1–8).) There is some evidence that staff morale improved during filming, possibly because filming provided opportunities for staff to earn overtime. (See Defs.’ SOF ¶ 36; PSOAF ¶ 54.) But Plaintiffs have offered facts suggesting there was little effort to encourage detainee meet-and-greets with the stars, such that any potential benefit the detainees would have derived from such contacts was minimal. (See Pls.’ Opp’n at 21–22.) Some detainees were able to meet briefly with actors Chris Rock and Terrence Howard in June, but there were no interactions between Empire’s cast and crew and the detainees during the July or August filming periods. (PSOAF ¶ 47.) A reasonable jury could find that Dixon’s motivations were more personal ones: He met and took photos with all of Empire’s stars, and he even received a “director’s chair” to use during the August filming. (Id. ¶¶ 49–53.) There also is some evidence that Dixon took steps to minimize scrutiny of the filming by Professor Geraghty and Judge Holderman, who was monitoring the JTDC as part of the Doe litigation. (Id. ¶¶ 56–58.) A reasonable jury could conclude that Dixon lacked a legitimate governmental purpose for imposing the challenged conditions, or that the conditions were excessive in light of that purpose. See Mulvania, 850 F.3d at 856–58.

It is not enough, however, for Plaintiffs to show that Defendant Dixon may have violated their constitutional rights. Plaintiffs are suing Dixon in his individual capacity (Pls.’ Opp’n at 45), meaning that he may raise qualified immunity as an affirmative defense. Kentucky v. Graham, 473 U.S. 159, 166 (1985) (“[A]n official in a personal-capacity action may, depending on his position, be able to assert personal immunity defenses,” including qualified immunity).¹² If Dixon is entitled to qualified immunity, then Plaintiffs’ § 1983 claims cannot go forward.

B. Qualified Immunity

The doctrine of qualified immunity consists of two related inquiries: “first, whether the constitutional right asserted by the plaintiffs was clearly established at the time the defendants acted; and second, whether defendants’ actions violated that clearly established right.” Hardeman, 933 F.3d at 820 (citations omitted). “If either inquiry is answered in the negative, the defendant official is protected by qualified immunity.” Id. (citations omitted); see also Pearson v. Callahan, 555 U.S. 223, 236 (2009) (concluding that courts may exercise “discretion in deciding which of the two prongs of the qualified immunity analysis should be addressed first”). Once defendants have raised qualified immunity as an affirmative defense, plaintiffs bear the burden of showing that the constitutional right was “clearly established.” Hardeman, 933 F.3d at 820; see also Mannoia v. Farrow, 476 F.3d 453, 457 (7th Cir. 2007) (“Although the privilege of qualified immunity is a defense, the plaintiff carries the burden of defeating it.”). Courts should not define clearly established law “at a high level of generality.” Hardeman, 933 F.3d at 820 (citations omitted). “An appropriately defined right is clearly established if there is a closely analogous—though not necessarily identical—case identifying that right, or if the defendant’s conduct was so egregious and unreasonable that . . . no reasonable [official] could have thought he was acting lawfully.” Id. (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). “The dispositive question is whether the violative nature of particular conduct is clearly established.” Id. (internal quotation marks and citations omitted, emphasis in original).

At a high level of generality, the right of pretrial detainees to be free of conditions of confinement imposed for no legitimate governmental purpose is clearly established. See Bell, 441 U.S. at 539. “The dispositive question,” however, “is whether the violative nature of particular conduct is clearly established.” Hardeman, 933 F.3d at 820 (emphasis in original). As discussed above, the parties dispute whether the challenged conditions were objectively unreasonable or were excessive in relation to a legitimate government purpose. In the absence of an analogous case holding that similar conditions are unconstitutional, the court cannot conclude, as a matter of law, that pretrial detainees have a clearly established right to be free of the arguably modest disruptions at issue here.

The two cases that Plaintiffs cite in their brief opposing summary judgment are not analogous. In Demery v. Arpaio, the Ninth Circuit held that the practice of installing webcams in a county jail and livestreaming the video online violated detainees’ Fourteenth Amendment rights because the webcams were not reasonably related to a nonpunitive purpose. 378 F.3d 1020, 1030–31 (9th Cir. 2004). Applying Bell, the court reasoned that “the webcams did not improve the security of the pretrial detention center when closed-circuit video cameras were already present,” and “turning pretrial detainees into the unwilling objects of the latest reality show” did not serve a legitimate goal, such as ensuring detainees’ attendance at trial or promoting prison safety. Id. at 1030, 1031. In Robles v. Prince George’s Cnty., the Fourth Circuit held that police officers violated a pretrial detainee’s due process rights when they tied him to a metal pole in a deserted parking lot and left him there for approximately ten minutes. 302 F.3d 262, 269–70 (4th Cir. 2002). The court observed that the detainee’s injury “was more than de minimis” because he was “tied up in a dark and deserted location in the middle of the night” and “did not know when or if anyone would come to rescue him or who might discover him.” Id. at 270.

Neither Demery nor Robles dealt with the kinds of conditions at issue in this case: operational disruptions to a juvenile detention facility. Plaintiffs have not pointed to cases involving, for example, changes to the location of schooling or recreation; missed opportunities for enrichment programs; marginally reduced privacy during visitation; or “overcrowding” in pods that nonetheless provide detainees with their own rooms.¹³ The court is sensitive to the fact that Plaintiffs are or were juveniles at the time of the filming, and that the standard for substantive due process violations may well be lower for juvenile pretrial detainees than for adult detainees. See Bergren v. City of Milwaukee, 811 F.2d 1139, 1143 (7th Cir. 1987) (“In assessing whether the treatment of the detained juvenile satisfies the requirements of due process, it is quite appropriate—indeed necessary—to consider that in such an environment juveniles may indeed have different needs and more importantly, different capacities than adults.”); Doe v. Cook Cnty., No. 99 C 3945, 1999 WL 1069244, at *4 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 22, 1999) (“[T]he 14th amendment due process standard should, as a general matter, be more liberally construed when applied to juvenile pretrial detainees.”). But even under a more liberal standard, Plaintiffs have not identified an analogous case that would have put Defendant Dixon on notice that his conduct was unlawful.¹⁴

¹⁴ In Bergren, for example, the Seventh Circuit held that a juvenile detainee who was arrested and held in custody for ten hours did not suffer unconstitutional conditions of confinement because he was not punished or confined for an excessive amount of time. Bergren, 811 F.2d at 1144 (“We stress that, in holding that the actions of the police officers in this case did not violate the minimum standards imposed by the federal constitution, we do not express in any way our approval of the methodology employed by the officers in this case. We simply hold that, under these circumstances, there was no violation of the federal constitution.”).

Plaintiffs are correct that, when determining whether a government official violated a constitutional right, courts should view the facts “in the light most favorable to the party asserting the injury.” Saucier v. Katz, 533 U.S. 194, 201 (2001), overruled on other grounds by Pearson, 555 U.S. at 236. But if the right asserted is not clearly established, then the court need not proceed to the other qualified immunity inquiry. See Hardeman, 933 F.3d at 820 (“If either inquiry is answered in the negative, the defendant official is protected by qualified immunity.”). Furthermore, this case does not involve such extreme circumstances that no reasonable officer could have concluded that the conditions were constitutionally permissible. Compare Taylor v. Riojas, 141 S. Ct. 52, 53 (2020) (holding that correctional officers were not entitled to qualified immunity where inmate was confined in a pair of shockingly unsanitary cells for six days).

Because Plaintiffs have not met their burden, Defendant Dixon is entitled to qualified immunity on Plaintiffs’ § 1983 claims. The court grants the County Defendants’ motion for summary judgment as to those claims.

II. State-Law Claims

The following state-law claims remain: breach of fiduciary duty against Dixon (Count VII), intentional infliction of emotional distress against the County Defendants (Count IX), indemnification against Cook County (Count XII), inducement of a breach of fiduciary duty against the Fox Defendants (Count VIII), and unjust enrichment against the Fox Defendants (Count XIII). Now that the court has dismissed all of Plaintiffs’ federal claims, the court would ordinarily dismiss Plaintiffs’ remaining state law claims without prejudice. Harvey v. Town of Merrillville, 649 F.3d 526, 533 (7th Cir. 2011) (“[I]t is the well-established law of this circuit that the usual practice is to dismiss without prejudice state supplemental claims whenever all federal claims have been dismissed prior to trial.” (quoting Groce v. Eli Lilly & Co., 193 F.3d 496, 501 (7th Cir.1999))). Here, however, given this case’s lengthy procedural history and the extensive judicial resources expended thus far, the court will exercise its discretion to retain jurisdiction over the remaining state law claims. See, e.g., Timm, 32 F.3d at 276–77 (holding that it was not improper for district court to retain jurisdiction over state claims after granting summary judgment on only federal claim in the case).

A. Breach of Fiduciary Duty

1. Merits

Plaintiffs argue that Dixon owed them a fiduciary duty and breached it by permitting the Empire filming. Specifically, they contend that Dixon “misdirected [the JTDC’s] resources for his own benefit and that of Fox, to the detriment of the youth who had been placed in his care.” (Pls.’ Opp’n at 38.) By Plaintiffs’ account, Dixon’s actions injured them by exacerbating the psychological impact of incarceration and endangered them by increasing the risk of physical violence at the JTDC.

To prevail on their claim for breach of fiduciary duty under Illinois law, Plaintiffs must show that “(1) a fiduciary duty existed, (2) that duty was breached, and (3) the breach of the duty proximately caused damages.” Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Sinikovic, 125 F. Supp. 3d 769, 777 (N.D. Ill. 2015) (citing Gross v. Town of Cicero, Ill., 619 F.3d 697, 709 (7th Cir. 2010)). This court has repeatedly recognized that “the state has a duty, under clearly established principles of constitutional and tort law, ‘to assume some responsibility’ for the ‘safety and general well-being’ of detainees.” T.S., 334 F.R.D. at 538 n.14 (quoting DeShaney v. Winnebago Cnty. Dep’t of Soc. Servs., 489 U.S. 189, 199–200 (1989)); see also T.S., 2017 WL 1425596 at *10 (same). Defendants agree that detention center officials owe detainees a duty to provide “for basic human needs, such as ‘food, clothing, shelter, medical care, and reasonable safety.’” (County Defs.’ Summ. J. Mot. [414] at 27 (quoting DeShaney, 489 U.S. at 200)). But they argue that the duty is not a fiduciary one. (See, e.g., County Defs.’ Summ. J. Mot. at 27; County Defs.’ Summ. J. Reply [428] at 1 (maintaining that “no Illinois case, state or federal, has held that detention officials are fiduciaries for detainees”).)

In this court's view, Defendants have defined the scope of their responsibility too narrowly. Illinois law recognizes a guardian-ward relationship as a type of fiduciary relationship. See In re Estate of Gustafson, 268 Ill. App. 3d 404, 407, 644 N.E.2d 813, 816 (2d Dist. 1994). At the motion to dismiss stage, Judge St. Eve recognized that Plaintiffs "were not officially adjudicated as 'wards' of the court . . . during the relevant time period." T.S., 2017 WL 1425596 at *10. She nevertheless agreed that Illinois law supports Plaintiffs' theory that Dixon acted as their guardian while they were housed at the JTDC, and that he therefore owed them a fiduciary duty. See id. (citing cases). Defendants maintain that Judge St. Eve did not determine that Dixon's duty "definitely was fiduciary in nature." (County Defs.' Summ. J. Reply at 9.) This court is comfortable concluding that it was.

Parks v. Kownacki supports this conclusion. 305 Ill. App. 3d 449, 461, 711 N.E.2d 1208, 1216 (5th Dist. 1999), rev'd on other grounds, 193 Ill. 2d 164, 737 N.E.2d 287 (2000). There, an Illinois appellate court determined that a guardian-ward relationship arose between a priest and a teenaged girl when the priest kept the girl "in the rectory as his housekeeper, [sent] her to school far away from her parents and family, and . . . exercise[d] all the control over her that a legal guardian would be allowed to exercise." Id. Likewise, the court determined that the priest owed the girl a fiduciary duty because of this relationship. See id. The Illinois Supreme Court reversed the decision on other grounds and therefore did not expressly endorse these conclusions. 193 Ill. 2d 164, 737 N.E.2d 287. But the Court did state that when the priest "accepted the responsibility of plaintiff's care and education, he took on the role of her guardian, even though he was not given that title by a court." Id. at 169, 737 N.E.2d at 290; see also Clayton v. Millers First Ins. Cos., 384 Ill. App. 3d 429, 436, 892 N.E.2d 613, 619 (5th Dist. 2008) (noting same). The JTDC housed and educated these Plaintiffs while they were away from their parents, and Dixon "exercise[d] all the control over [them] that a legal guardian would be allowed to exercise." Parks, 305 Ill. App. 3d at 461, 711 N.E.2d at 1216. So, like the priest in Parks, Dixon can fairly be said to have acted as Plaintiffs' guardian and fiduciary while they were detained at the JTDC.

That Parks involved different kinds of harm does not change this conclusion. See Parks, 305 Ill. App. 3d at 454, 711 N.E.2d at 1211 (priest allegedly beat and sexually abused teenaged girl). Nor do Defendants' cited cases, in which, according to Defendants, the courts held either that "there is no fiduciary relationship between prison officials and detainees" or that "[any] fiduciary relationship is limited to physicians and detainee patients or . . . the handling of detainees' funds." (County Defs.' Summ. J. Mot. at 28.) In the only cited case applying Illinois law, Day v. Jeffreys, the court stated that it was "unclear" whether the plaintiff's claim for breach of fiduciary duty against the director of the Illinois Department Corrections was cognizable under a statute concerning sexually dangerous persons. No. 19-CV-00945-NJR, 2019 WL 6701671, at *4 (S.D. Ill. Dec. 9, 2019). Despite the uncertainty, the court denied the motion to dismiss the claim. See id. If anything, therefore, Day undermines Defendants' position. More importantly, neither Day nor the other cited cases (which are, in any event, not controlling authority) concerned juvenile detainees. See id.; Surratt v. McClaran, 234 F. Supp. 3d 815 (E.D. Tex. 2016), aff'd sub nom. Surratt v. McClarin, 851 F.3d 389 (5th Cir. 2017); Rua v. Glodis, 52 F. Supp. 3d 84 (D. Mass. 2014); Sperry v. Corizon Health, Inc., No. 18-3119-SAC, 2020 WL 905745 (D. Kan. Feb. 25, 2020); Hernandez v. Cate, No. EDCV 11-00627 R AJW, 2014 WL 6473769 (C.D. Cal. Oct. 16, 2014), report and recommendation adopted, No. EDCV11-00627 R AJW, 2014 WL 6606901 (C.D. Cal. Nov. 18, 2014). This line of cases does not disturb the basis for finding a fiduciary duty here: the guardian-ward relationship between Dixon and the JTDC detainees.

Defendants next argue that, even if Dixon owed Plaintiffs a fiduciary duty, the scope of the duty is the same as Dixon's obligation to juveniles or pretrial detainees under the Fourteenth Amendment's due process clause. For support, they observe that the court has cited DeShaney, 489 U.S. at 199–200, for the proposition that Dixon's fiduciary duty involved protecting Plaintiffs' safety and well-being. See, e.g., T.S., 2017 WL 1425596 at *10. Defendants are correct that in the cited portion of DeShaney, the Supreme Court discussed a constitutional standard. See DeShaney, 489 U.S. at 199–200 (explaining that when a state restrains a person’s liberty by taking him into custody, “the Constitution imposes upon it a corresponding duty to assume some responsibility for his safety and general well-being”). But the DeShaney Court also emphasized that a state can “impose such affirmative duties of care and protection upon its agents as it wishes,” and that “not ‘all common-law duties owed by government actors were . . . constitutionalized by the Fourteenth Amendment.’” Id. at 202 (quoting Daniels v. Williams, 474 U.S. 327, 335 (1986)); see also Daniels, 474 U.S. at 335 (“Jailers may owe a special duty of care to those in their custody under state tort law . . .”). Because DeShaney draws a distinction between constitutional obligations and state-law tort duties, it does not establish that Dixon’s fiduciary duty to Plaintiffs was congruent with his obligations to them under the Fourteenth Amendment. See also, e.g., T.S., 2017 WL 1425596 at *10 (recognizing that Dixon’s duty to protect Plaintiffs has constitutional and tort-law dimensions).

Illinois courts require a child’s guardian-fiduciary to “protect the child from harm.” Parks, 305 Ill. App. 3d at 461, 711 N.E.2d at 1216 (citing People v. Watson, 103 Ill. App. 3d 992, 998, 431 N.E.2d 1350, 1355 (4th Dist. 1982)). That duty includes “refrain[ing] from harming and . . . restrain[ing] others within one’s control from harming” the child. Parks, 305 Ill. App. 3d at 461, 711 N.E.2d at 1216. It can also be understood as encompassing an obligation to “care” for the child. See, e.g., Parks, 193 Ill. 2d at 169, 737 N.E.2d at 290 (priest assumed role as teenager’s guardian by “accept[ing] the responsibility” for her “care and education”). Under these definitions, a guardian necessarily must protect a child’s “safety and general well-being.” DeShaney, 489 U.S. at 200. But because a guardian’s fiduciary duty arises under Illinois law, there is no support for importing Fourteenth Amendment standards to limit it—even in the juvenile detention context. Defendants point to no Illinois law providing otherwise.

If the standard for establishing a breach of fiduciary duty is lower than that for establishing a Fourteenth Amendment violation, Defendants contend, the court must conclude Plaintiffs cannot meet that standard because none of Dixon's actions "put detainees' safety and well-being at risk." (County Defs.' Summ. J. Mot. at 29 (internal quotation marks omitted).) A reasonable jury could disagree. Dixon did testify during his deposition that he permitted the Empire filming because he thought it would benefit the detainees. (Dixon Dep. 112:1–8.) But Plaintiffs have presented evidence tending to show that by permitting the filming, Dixon interrupted the normal operations of the JTDC in ways that harmed the detainees' well-being. For example, a jury reasonably could infer that the filming caused T.S., Q.B., and H.C. to miss at least one day of recreation outside of their pods. In addition, a jury reasonably could find that because of the filming, T.S. had less privacy during a family visit; T.S. had to take one day of summer school classes in his pod rather than in a classroom; and T.S. and H.C. missed one session of a free-writing program that they regularly attended after school. Considering (among other things) Dr. Kraus's opinion that spending more time on the pod with fewer activities can worsen the psychological impact of detention on juveniles (see, e.g., Kraus Rpt. ¶ 6), a reasonable jury could conclude that Dixon breached his fiduciary duty and caused Plaintiffs harm.

There is also evidence tending to show that the Empire filming required increasing the population in certain pods beyond their functional capacity. Dunlap opined that following functional capacity guidelines was "essential [for] youth in custody to fe[el] safe and [to be] safe." (Dunlap Rpt. ¶ 57.) Dr. Kraus opined that overcrowding in pods can put detainees' safety at risk. (Kraus Rpt. ¶¶ 30(c), 38.) Although Plaintiffs have not identified evidence that fights occurred more frequently in the pods whose population exceeded functional capacity, a jury reasonably could conclude based on the expert opinions that detainees in those pods felt less safe. In turn, a reasonable jury could find that Dixon breached his fiduciary duty to protect the detainees in those pods, and that those detainees suffered harm to their well-being.

It bears mention that Plaintiffs' failure to present evidence that the Empire filming jeopardized their medical treatment is not fatal to their claim. Defendants argue that the claim survived only because of medical-related claims that Plaintiffs later withdrew, but they are incorrect. In ruling on Defendants' first motion to dismiss, the court credited Plaintiffs' allegations that Dixon and Cook County subjected them "to numerous restrictions that were detrimental to their health and safety so that the Fox Defendants could film a television show." T.S., 2017 WL 1425596 *10 (emphasis added). That language cannot reasonably be understood as limiting Plaintiffs' claim to a medical context. And it is broad enough to encompass restrictions that increased detainees' time on the pod and interfered with their schooling, activities, and family visits.

For the reasons just explained, a reasonable jury could find that Dixon breached his fiduciary duty to Plaintiffs and caused them harm. The court, therefore, denies the County Defendants' motion for summary judgment on the breach of fiduciary duty claim. In addition to seeking damages for harm resulting from the alleged breach, Plaintiffs seek restitution. First, they appear to seek the value of the director's chair and autographed photographs that Dixon received from Fox and Empire actors. (See Pls.' Renewed Mot. for Class Cert. [351] (hereinafter "Renewed Mot.") at 32.) Plaintiffs maintain that the value of those items is "quantifiable" (id.), though they have not identified evidence showing that the value is significant. On the other hand, the County Defendants do not cite legal authority providing that restitution is unavailable for an ill-gotten benefit whose value is de minimis. Because the evidence permits a reasonable inference that Dixon received the items in question because of the alleged breach, the court denies the County Defendants' motion for summary judgment on Plaintiffs' restitution claim as it relates to Dixon. See Martin v. Heinold Commodities, Inc., 163 Ill. 2d 33, 56–57, 643 N.E.2d 734, 745 (1994) (to obtain restitution from breaching party, a plaintiff must show that the party obtained a benefit from the breach). Second, Plaintiffs seek restitution of the benefits that the Fox Defendants gained because of Dixon's alleged breach: the revenue Fox received from the Empire filming. The court addresses this request in its discussion of the Fox Defendants' alleged liability. See infra Part II.D.2.

2. State-Law Sovereign Immunity

The County Defendants have raised state sovereign immunity as an affirmative defense to Plaintiffs' state-law claims. (County Defs.' Summ. J. Mot. [414] at 23–24.) They argue that the Illinois Court of Claims has exclusive jurisdiction over all tort claims against the State of Illinois, and Plaintiffs' state-law claims against Dixon and the County are claims against the State because Dixon is a state employee.¹⁵ See Illinois Court of Claims Act, 705 ILCS 505/8(d); Healy v. Vaupel, 549 N.E.2d 1240, 1246–47, 133 Ill.2d 295, 307–08 (Ill. 1990). The Seventh Circuit has recognized, however, that “Congress, not the states, determines the jurisdictional authority of the federal courts.” Rodriguez v. Cook County, 664 F.3d 627, 632 (7th Cir. 2011). Thus, “a state employee's sovereign-immunity defense does not impact a federal court's jurisdiction over a case.” Fields v. Wharrie, 672 F.3d 505, 518 (7th Cir. 2012). The court concludes that the Illinois Court of Claims Act does not deprive it of jurisdiction over the remaining state-law claims in this case. See id. at 518–19.

Setting aside the jurisdictional issue, Defendant Dixon is not entitled to sovereign immunity under Illinois law, at least at this juncture. Defendants appear to invoke the Illinois State Lawsuit Immunity Act, 745 ILCS 5/1, which provides that the State is generally immune from suit in federal court. That immunity can shield state employees even when those employees are sued in their individual capacity. Richman v. Sheahan, 270 F.3d 430, 441 (7th Cir. 2001). But the Seventh Circuit has recognized an exception where the “plaintiff alleges that state officials or employees violated ‘statutory or constitutional law.’” Murphy v. Smith, 844 F.3d 653, 658 (7th Cir. 2016) (quoting Healy, 549 N.E.2d at 1247); see also Fritz v. Johnson, 807 N.E.2d 461, 468, 209 Ill. 2d 302, 313 (2004) (“Whenever a state employee performs illegally, unconstitutionally, or without authority, a suit may still be maintained against the employee in his individual capacity and does not constitute an action against the State of Illinois.”). This exception, which appears to eviscerate the statutory immunity in many cases, applies to state-law claims as well, “so long as the same alleged conduct underlies both the constitutional claims and the state tort claims.” Gay v. Ortman, No. 18 C 50310, 2020 WL 5593283, at *2 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 18, 2020).

Because Plaintiffs’ state-law claims against Dixon are based on the same conduct as their constitutional claims, the court is not prepared at this time to conclude that Defendant Dixon claim has sovereign immunity. Murphy, 844 F.3d at 660 (denying sovereign immunity where plaintiff alleged and proved that state officers “acted in violation of statutory or constitutional law”). He will be free to raise the sovereign immunity defense again at trial. Murphy, 844 F.3d at 660 n.3 (“We believe Illinois also requires a plaintiff ultimately to prove the alleged [constitutional] violations.”); Nadzhafaliyev v. Hardy, No. 16 C 6844, 2020 WL 7027578, at *10–11 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 30, 2020) (denying state sovereign immunity at the summary judgment stage because “a jury reasonably could find that Defendants . . . violated Plaintiff’s right to due process under the Fourteenth Amendment”). In other words, sovereign immunity may apply if Dixon can persuade the jury that he had a legitimate government purpose for imposing the challenged conditions, or that the conditions were reasonable in relation to that purpose, and thus Plaintiffs have not proved their constitutional claim. This is so even though the court has granted summary judgment for Dixon on the constitutional claims on the basis of qualified immunity. The application of qualified immunity shields an officer from liability, but it does not negate the possible presence of an underlying constitutional violation. See Aaron L. Nielson & Christopher J. Walker, The New Qualified Immunity, 89 S. Cal. L. Rev. 1, 34–36 (2015) (examining cases in which courts recognized that a constitutional violation had occurred but nonetheless granted qualified immunity because the violation was not clearly established at the time).

B. Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress

Plaintiffs also assert a claim against Dixon and the County for intentional infliction of emotional distress (IIED). In short, they argue that by allowing Fox to film Empire at the JTDC, Dixon exacerbated the adverse psychological impact of incarceration on the detainees. To prevail on their IIED claim, Plaintiffs must prove three elements. “First, the conduct involved must be truly extreme and outrageous. Second, the actor must either intend that his conduct inflict severe emotional distress, or know that there is at least a high probability that his conduct will cause severe emotional distress. Third, the conduct must in fact cause severe emotional distress.” Feltmeier v. Feltmeier, 207 Ill. 2d 263, 269, 798 N.E.2d 75, 80 (2003) (internal quotation marks omitted); see also, e.g., Cairel v. Alderden, 821 F.3d 823, 835 (7th Cir. 2016) (same). “[M]ere insults, indignities, threats, annoyances, petty oppressions, or other trivialities” do not give rise to an IIED claim. McGrath v. Fahey, 126 Ill. 2d 78, 86, 533 N.E.2d 806, 809 (1988) (quoting Restatement (Second) of Torts § 46, cmt. d, at 73 (Am. L. Inst. 1965)). Instead, “the nature of the defendant’s conduct must be so extreme as to go beyond all possible bounds of decency and to be regarded as intolerable in a civilized community.” Feltmeier, 207 Ill. 2d at 270, 798 N.E.2d at 80–81.

The court first considers whether the evidence permits a reasonable conclusion that Dixon’s conduct was objectively extreme and outrageous. Three non-exclusive factors are relevant to this inquiry. See Cairel, 821 F.3d at 835. The first is “the degree of power or authority the defendant holds over the plaintiff.” Id. The more control a defendant has over a plaintiff, “the more likely that defendant’s conduct will be deemed outrageous” Feltmeier, 207 Ill. 2d at 273, 798 N.E.2d at 82 (quoting McGrath, 126 Ill. 2d at 86–87, 533 N.E.2d at 809). “Second, courts consider whether the defendant knew the plaintiff was particularly susceptible to emotional distress and acted inappropriately despite that knowledge.” Cairel, 821 F.3d at 836; see also Graham v. Commonwealth Edison Co., 318 Ill. App. 3d 736, 746, 742 N.E.2d 858, 867 (1st. Dist. 2000). “Behavior that would not normally be considered outrageous may be actionable if the defendant knows that the plaintiff is particularly susceptible.” Graham, 318 Ill. App. 3d at 746, 742 N.E.2d at 867 (citing McGrath, 126 Ill. 2d at 89–90, 533 N.E.2d at 811). “Third, courts consider whether the defendant reasonably believed that his objective was legitimate.” Cairel, 821 F.3d at 836 (internal quotation marks omitted) (citing McGrath, 126 Ill. 2d at 88, 533 N.E.2d at 810).

In contending that Dixon’s conduct was extreme and outrageous, Plaintiffs suggest that Dixon permitted the Empire filming not for a legitimate purpose, but rather because he wanted to meet celebrities. Plaintiffs also emphasize that the detainees were children and Dixon was responsible for their care. In addition, Plaintiffs argue that Dixon knew the detainees were particularly susceptible to emotional distress. To that end, they cite Dixon’s testimony during his deposition for this case that “juvenile detention is the emergency room of the juvenile justice system.” (Dixon Dep. at 49:13–15.) Finally, Plaintiffs maintain that Dixon exercised “complete control” over the detainees. (Pls.’ Opp’n at 44.) Whether Dixon’s decision to permit the Empire filming went “beyond all possible bounds of decency” is debatable. Feltmeier, 207 Ill. 2d at 270, 798 N.E.2d at 80–81. But considering the power Dixon wielded over the children and their vulnerability as detainees, a jury drawing all reasonable inferences in Plaintiffs’ favor could conclude that it did.

Plaintiffs stumble on the other elements of their claim, however. Regarding intent, Plaintiffs parrot the case law. They argue that Dixon knew there was a high probability that his conduct could cause the detainees severe emotional distress, but they do not explain why.

Dixon's deposition testimony that "juvenile detention is the emergency room of the juvenile justice system" does not fill this gap. (Dixon Dep. at 49:13–15.) The testimony can fairly be understood as showing Dixon's knowledge that the detainees were susceptible to emotional distress. But it says nothing about how JTDC operations or changes thereto can affect the detainees, psychologically or otherwise. Considering the cited testimony alone, no reasonable jury could find that Dixon acted with the requisite knowledge that permitting the disruptions generated by the Empire filming would cause Plaintiffs severe emotional distress.

Nor is it clear that Plaintiffs' suffering in fact rose to this level. "The law intervenes only where the distress inflicted is so severe that no reasonable man could be expected to endure it." McGrath, 126 Ill. 2d at 86, 533 N.E.2d at 809 (quoting Restatement (Second) of Torts § 46, cmt. j, at 77–78 (Am. L. Inst. 1965)). Where plaintiffs have alleged that defendants' actions "caused them simply to become annoyed, frustrated, stressful, distressed, embarrassed, humiliated or nervous," courts generally have determined that they did not state a claim for IIED under Illinois law. Honaker v. Smith, 256 F.3d 477, 495 (7th Cir. 2001); see also, e.g., Welsh v. Commonwealth Edison Co., 306 Ill. App. 3d 148, 155, 713 N.E.2d 679, 684 (1st Dist. 1999). True, a plaintiff can establish that he suffered severe emotional distress without proof of a physical injury or the need for medical or psychiatric treatment. See Honaker, 256 F.3d at 496; Bristow v. Drake St. Inc., 41 F.3d 345, 350 (7th Cir. 1994). But courts are "more inclined" to find that a plaintiff has established such a claim "when the distress has manifested itself either through physical symptoms or has necessitated medical treatment." Honaker, 256 F.3d at 495.

According to Dixon and the County, Plaintiffs have not submitted evidence suggesting that T.S., Q.B., or H.C. suffered any emotional distress, let alone severe emotional distress. Defendants also emphasize that Dr. Kraus—who opined that increasing juveniles' time on the pod and limiting their activities can exacerbate the psychological effects of incarceration—did not examine T.S., Q.B., or H.C. Plaintiffs do not dispute these points. Furthermore, in their IIED briefing, Plaintiffs do not mention the statement from Taylor—a youth development specialist at the JTDC—that detainees in the pods where she worked seemed more anxious and felt “cooped up” during the Empire filming. (Taylor Decl. ¶ 22.) Plaintiffs certainly do not attempt to argue that the changes Taylor claims to have observed in the detainees went beyond mere annoyance, frustration, or stress, which do not supply a basis for an IIED claim under Illinois law. See, e.g., Honaker, 256 F.3d at 495. Instead, Plaintiffs maintain that, based solely on the purported outrageousness of Dixon’s conduct, a jury reasonably could find that T.S., Q.B., H.C., or other putative class members suffered severe emotional distress.

It is true that “the extreme and outrageous character of the defendant’s conduct” may itself be “important evidence that the distress has existed.” Honaker, 256 F.3d at 496 (quoting Wall v. Pecaro, 204 Ill. App. 3d 362, 368, 561 N.E.2d 1084, 1088 (1st Dist. 1990)). Relatedly, Illinois courts “tend to merge the issue of the outrageousness of the defendant’s conduct with the issue of the severity of the plaintiff’s emotional distress” Bristow, 41 F.3d at 350. But Plaintiffs have not cited any authority providing that outrageous conduct, without more, constitutes proof that a victim suffered severe emotional distress. Indeed, the court in Honaker stated that outrageous conduct may be “important” to the inquiry, not that it is sufficient. 256 F.3d at 496. And in Bristow, the court explained that “the weaker the evidence of distress,” the more evidence of outrageousness is required to tip the balance in the plaintiff’s favor. 41 F.3d at 350 (emphasis added). Bristow does not establish that a plaintiff can satisfy his burden of proof without any evidence that he suffered severe emotional distress.

In short, the purported outrageousness of Dixon’s conduct does not substitute for evidence that Plaintiffs suffered severe emotional distress. And although the court has concluded that a reasonable jury could find that Dixon’s breach of fiduciary duty harmed Plaintiffs—including by increasing the psychological effects that incarceration had on them—Plaintiffs make no effort to explain how that harm was sufficiently severe to support an IIED claim. The court grants summary judgment on the IIED claim in favor of Dixon and the County.

C. Indemnification

Because at least one state-law claim against Dixon survives this ruling, the court turns to Plaintiffs' argument that Cook County is obligated by Illinois law to pay any judgment entered against Dixon. In Illinois, counties are obligated to "pay any tort judgment" against an employee found liable for actions taken "within the scope of his employment." 745 ILCS 10/9-102. Cook County argues, however, that this obligation is not triggered here because, as an employee of the Chief Judge's office, Dixon is a state employee rather than a county employee. But that status does not control the analysis; that is, "the fact that [the defendant] is not an employee of the County is not dispositive." Cannon v. Burge, No. 05 C 2192, 2006 WL 273544, at *21 (N.D. Ill. Feb. 2, 2006). Instead, "under the Seventh Circuit's decision in Robinson v. Sappington, 351 F.3d 317 (7th Cir. 2003), the County has a duty to indemnify claims brought against State officials where the County funds the office of that state official." Cannon, 2006 WL 273544, at *21. Cook County funds the JTDC, see 55 ILCS 75/1(a), and thus remains liable for indemnification for any tortious actions that Dixon takes within the scope of his employment.¹⁶

In challenging this determination, Cook County contends that Robinson's holding applies only to state employees where the county not only funds, but also "maintain[s]" the office in question. Robinson, 351 F.3d at 339 ("The responsibility for maintaining and funding the Macon County Circuit Court lies with Macon County."). And the County notes that, in its November 2020 decision to grant partial summary judgment, this court already found that there is no evidence that Cook County has the authority "to dictate how the Chief Judge operates and administers the [JTDC].” T.S., 2020 WL 6870809, at *5. That statement appears, however, in a separate discussion of whether the Chief Judge was, himself, an agent of the county. Id. Elsewhere in the opinion, the court listed a number of ways in which the county might be said to “maintain” the JTDC, including the county’s ability to rebuild or relocate the JTDC if the county determines it is obsolete; the ability to fix the monthly salary of the superintendent and other necessary personnel; and the ability, at any time, to require the superintendent to provide information concerning the conduct, maintenance, or residents of the JTDC. Id.

Further, although the Seventh Circuit in Robinson noted that the county defendant there both maintained and funded the county court in question, the Seventh Circuit did not go so far as to say that such maintenance was a requirement for finding the county responsible for indemnifying the defendant state judge. Notably, the Seventh Circuit grounded the Robinson holding in the Illinois Supreme Court’s decision in Carver v. Sheriff of La Salle Cnty., 203 Ill. 2d 497, 787 N.E.2d 127 (2003). The Carver Court made no mention of the county’s role in “maintaining” the sheriff’s office at issue there; instead the Court said only, “Because the office of the sheriff is funded by the county, the county is therefore required to pay a judgment entered against [defendant sheriff’s office employee]”¹⁷ Id. at 522, 787 N.E.2d at 141. For that reason, the court denies Cook County’s motion for summary judgment on Plaintiffs’ indemnification claim. See Haag v. Cook County, No. 1:17-CV-05403, 2021 WL 1192440, at *5 (N.D. Ill. Mar. 29, 2021) (finding, in dicta, that Robinson’s and Carver’s holding suggest that “[b]ecause Cook County funds the Office of the Chief Judge for Cook County, it would have been responsible for indemnification” of an employee of that office).

¹⁷ Unlike the defendants in Robinson and Carver, Dixon faces suit here in his individual, rather than official, capacity. Cook County did not argue that this distinction materially distinguishes these cases from Dixon’s.

D. Inducement and Unjust Enrichment

Plaintiffs next argue that Fox is liable for inducing Dixon to breach his fiduciary duty. “Under Illinois law, a party is liable for tortious inducement if a plaintiff demonstrates that the defendant (1) colluded with a fiduciary in committing a breach; (2) knowingly participated in or induced the breach of duty; and (3) knowingly accepted the benefits resulting from that breach.” Borsellino v. Goldman Sachs Grp., 477 F.3d 502, 508–09 (7th Cir. 2007) (citing Regnery v. Meyers, 287 Ill. App. 3d 354, 364, 679 N.E.2d 74, 80 (1st Dist. 1997)). In short, Plaintiffs must show both that the Fox Defendants engaged in “active misbehavior” that facilitated the breach and that the Fox Defendants knew that this behavior would cause Dixon to breach his fiduciary duty to the JTDC’s detainees. Id.; see also In re Pritzker, No. 02 CH 21426, 03 CH 7531, 2004 WL 414313, at *7 (Cir. Ct. of Ill. Mar. 5, 2014) (finding that active participation requires “that the parties knew or had reason to believe at the time of their alleged participation that the acts were wrongful”). Here, the Fox Defendants argue that Plaintiffs’ evidence could not support a jury finding on either front.

1. Tortious Inducement to Breach a Fiduciary Duty

First, Fox contends that they did not engage in the requisite level of “active misbehavior.” A reasonable jury could disagree. Illinois courts define active misbehavior as “an act or omission which furthers or completes the breach of trust by the trustee.” Chabraja v. Martwick, 248 Ill. App. 3d 995, 998, 618 N.E.2d 800, 803 (1st Dist. 1993) (citing G. Bogert, TRUSTS & TRUSTEES § 901, 258–259 (2d ed. 1982)). Courts apply this standard liberally. For example, in Vill. of Wheeling v. Stavros, the court reversed dismissal of a complaint alleging tortious inducement where the defendant “was in a position to and did control certain officials of the Village” who “violated their fiduciary duties to the village” even though “the means by which [the defendant] influenced Village officials to breach their duties [we]re not set forth” in the complaint. 89 Ill. App. 3d 450, 452–53, 455, 411 N.E.2d 1067, 1068–69, 1071 (1st Dist. 1980). Likewise, in Regnery, the First District

Appellate Court affirmed a judgment for a group of minority shareholders following a bench trial where the evidence showed that defendant, the brother of a majority shareholder, not only initiated the majority shareholder's "sale of stock to his brother and himself at a price far below market value," but also "fully participated in all steps of the transaction." 287 Ill. App. 3d at 363–64, 679 N.E.2d at 80.

In support of its argument that no jury could find that Fox engaged in active misbehavior, Fox cites Chabraja, where plaintiffs alleged that the Cook County School Superintendent had violated a fiduciary duty to the county by improperly holding public funds in a non-interest-bearing account. 248 Ill. App. 3d at 996, 618 N.E.2d at 801. Plaintiffs in Chabraja also alleged that the bank was liable for allowing the Superintendent to deposit the public funds. Affirming dismissal of that claim, the First District Appellate Court explained that "the mere act of accepting a deposit" did not amount to an "act or omission which furthers or completes the breach." Id. at 999, 618 N.E.2d at 803 (internal citations omitted). Fox also cites Borsellino, where plaintiff—a partner in a stock-trading company—claimed that defendant Goldman Sachs had tortiously induced plaintiff's two partners to breach their fiduciary duty to him by defrauding him of his rightful interest in the company. 477 F.3d at 504, 508. The Seventh Circuit affirmed dismissal of that claim on motion, explaining that "the plaintiffs have not alleged any active misbehavior on the part of Goldman Sachs," because the allegations that Goldman Sachs conspired against plaintiff with plaintiff's business partners "ma[de] neither economic nor common sense." Id. at 508–09. Thus, "even accepting all of the plaintiffs' allegations at face value, there was no interference by the defendant that could have induced a breach." Id. at 508.

In the case before this court, there is evidence from which a reasonable jury could find that Fox "further[ed] or complete[d]" Dixon's breach of fiduciary duty. Chabraja, 248 Ill. App. 3d at 998, 618 N.E.2d at 803 (internal citations omitted). Klemke reached out to Dixon to propose filming Empire at the JTDC (Klemke Dep. at 19:6–21); Klemke and Breen requested use of the classrooms, the outdoor yards, the visitation room, the chapel, and Pods 3A and 3B (Klemke Follow-up Email; Defs.' Ex. 20 at 2–5); and Fox repeatedly used those spaces, bringing some 150 crew members to the JTDC on at least four different days. (July 31 Robinson Email at 3.) These actions substantially exceed the conduct at issue in Chabraja, where the bank merely accepted a deposit. 248 Ill. App. 3d at 999, 618 N.E.2d at 803. Thus, if a jury finds that Dixon breached his fiduciary duty to the JTDC's detainees, then that jury could also reasonably find that Fox's actions furthered or completed that breach.

Fox's more powerful argument relates to knowledge: Fox argues that no reasonable jury could find that Fox knew that Dixon was breaching his fiduciary duty by allowing Fox to film at the JTDC. The parties debate whether the tortious inducement standard requires a plaintiff to show actual knowledge or whether constructive knowledge will suffice. This question does not appear to have a simple answer. Compare People ex rel. Daley v. Warren Motors, Inc., 114 Ill. 2d 305, 319, 500 N.E.2d 22, 28 (1986) (quoting Restatement (First) of Restitution § 174 cmt. a (Am. L. Inst. 1937)) ("A person has notice of facts giving rise to a constructive trust not only when he knows them, but also when he should know them."),¹⁸ with In re Canopy Fin., Inc., No. 12-cv-4646, 2015 WL 3505010, at *7 (N.D. Ill. June 2, 2015) ("[A]nalysis of claims of aiding and abetting . . . breach of fiduciary duty has consistently distinguished actual knowledge and participation from the 'should have known' state of mind, and has just as consistently held that the latter mindset is not actionable.").

The court need not decide whether constructive knowledge suffices, however, for the record lacks sufficient evidence to support a finding that Fox had even constructive knowledge. Fox, of course, knew that the detainees could not use the classrooms, chapel, outdoor yards, or intake pods while Fox was filming. But Klemke was under the impression that the JTDC could provide indoor alternatives for exercise (Klemke Dep. at 109:1–12), and there is no evidence that anyone at Fox knew that school would be in session at all that summer. School was in fact not in session during the June filming period (Resp. to SOF ¶ 42), and there is no evidence to suggest anybody at Fox knew or should have known that the July schedule would be any different. Plaintiffs have also identified no evidence that the Fox Defendants knew their use of Pods 3A and 3B would force JTDC to overpopulate other pods. And regarding visitation, Plaintiffs do not dispute that there is no evidence suggesting that Fox had any reason to know that JTDC had moved visitation to a smaller or less accommodating space. (Resp. to SOF ¶ 67.)

The only reasonable interpretation of the evidence is that JTDC officials created the impression that they would inform Fox if any of Fox’s requests jeopardized the detainees’ needs. In fact, Fox and the JTDC agreed to as much in Paragraph 1(D) of the Location Agreement.¹⁹ (Location Agreement.) And JTDC’s actions sent the same signals. JTDC General Counsel Alonzo testified that she worked with Dixon before the filming to tell Fox “what areas [JTDC] could put off for filming and . . . still meet the requirements for the kids.” (Alonzo Dep. at 12:13–13:23, 27:17–29:21.) For example, while Fox originally wanted to film in the infirmary (Location Agreement ¶ 1(A)), Alonzo rejected Fox’s request, explaining that filming in the infirmary would not comply with federal standards surrounding detainee care. (Defs.’ Ex. 45 at 2–4.) Such communication continued during filming, as well. Breen testified that, during filming, Fox had “consistent conversations” about where they could and could not be at certain times, leading to “numerous situations” where staff told Breen that they could not “do this right now because of the sensitivities of the location” (Breen Dep. at 80:1–8, 146:22–147:6.) Given JTDC’s behavior, the only reasonable conclusion about Fox’s knowledge is that Fox assumed that JTDC would inform the filming crew if their actions were negatively impacting the detainees.

¹⁹ Plaintiffs cite to a footnote in Brentwood Acad. v. Tenn. Secondary Sch. Athletic Ass’n, 531 U.S. 288, 302 n.4 (2001), for the proposition that such “formalism” present in this clause of the Location Agreement is not the “sine qua non” of liability in cases such as this one. Plaintiffs also cite Wickersham v. City of Columbia, 481 F.3d 591, 599 (8th Cir. 2007), for essentially the same proposition. Each of these cases, however, deals not with questions of liability, but rather with questions of whether formalistic lines drawn in rules or legislation can be dispositive of whether behavior by a defendant constitutes state action. In this case, the text of the Location Agreement is far from the only evidence suggesting that JTDC assured Fox that it would notify Fox if any of the filming requests had gone too far.

Plaintiffs’ counterarguments are not persuasive. First, Plaintiffs point to Klemke’s post-tour email to Dixon as evidence that Klemke knew Fox’s visit would lead Dixon to breach his fiduciary duty. In that email, Klemke stated that he hoped the filming schedule would make Fox’s presence “less of an impact,” and that he hoped that Fox and the JTDC could “discuss a way of making sure that we don’t interfere with your day to day operations too badly.” (Klemke Follow-Up Email (emphasis added).) Plaintiffs seize on this language, arguing that Klemke knew Fox’s presence would impact the JTDC and interfere with the jail’s day to day operations to some extent. At most, however, Klemke’s language indicates only what is obvious: that Fox’s presence would have some effect on the day-to-day operations of the JTDC. No reasonable jury could conclude from Klemke’s comment that Fox knew that the impact on operations would amount to a breach of fiduciary duty. In fact, when asked about this language, Klemke testified that his intention was to “give Superintendent Dixon an opportunity to tell me that he wasn’t comfortable with the things that I had suggested.” (Klemke Dep. at 36:19–37:8.) And Plaintiffs ignore the first part of the “too badly” quote in which Klemke stated, “Obviously your schedule would take precedence over ours” (Id.) It is true that, in the same email, Klemke suggested Fox would try to only bring 30 people into the facility—a number that Fox ultimately far exceeded, bringing at least 100 people every day of filming. (Klemke Follow-up Email; July 31 Robinson Email at 3.) But Plaintiffs can point to no evidence suggesting that the increased number of visitors caused the JTDC to place any extra restrictions on the detainees. Indeed, much of the requested space was used for filming or equipment storage and thus would have been unavailable to detainees even if Fox had brought only 30 people. (Klemke Follow-up Email; Defs.’ Ex. 20 at 2–4.)

Plaintiffs also emphasize evidence that Fox typically paid third parties for the inconvenience of having television shows filmed nearby. Whatever the significance of this evidence might be in another context, it is not sufficient to support a finding that Fox had constructive knowledge of harm that the Empire filming allegedly was inflicting on JTDC detainees. (Pls.' Opp'n at 59.) For one, Breen testified that these payments are not for mere inconvenience but rather for encroachments such as placing a light on someone's front lawn, boarding a barking dog in a kennel, or changing the neighbors' drapes if they are going to appear in a shot. (Pls.' Corrected Ex. 15 [426-3] at 55:21–56:19.) And if Plaintiffs are correct that Fox had a practice of paying third parties for mere inconvenience, that also does not change the outcome. Fox's potential knowledge of possible inconvenience for the JTDC is not sufficient to support an inference that Fox knew or should have known that its presence would harm the detainees.

Plaintiffs also suggest that Fox must have been aware of the potential for harm, because "Fox had filmed at night in both Cook County's downtown administration building and its courthouse at 26th and California so that it would not disturb the governmental work being done in those locations." (Pls.' Opp'n at 59.) Assuming this is true, it does not obviously support Plaintiffs' claims; it is at least as consistent with a conclusion that Fox would have catered to the JTDC's request to film at night, had the JTDC suggested that was necessary in order to protect the detainees. The court concludes that no reasonable jury could find that Fox had even constructive knowledge that Dixon was breaching his fiduciary duty to the detainees at the JTDC. For that reason, Plaintiffs' tortious inducement claim against Fox fails.

2. Unjust Enrichment

Plaintiffs argue in the alternative that even if the Fox Defendants are not liable for tortious inducement, they are liable under an unjust enrichment theory because they benefitted from Dixon's breach of fiduciary duty. In support of this argument, Plaintiffs cite Stavros, where the First District Appellate court of Illinois explained that “[a] third party who . . . knowingly accepts any benefit from . . . a breach [of a trustee’s duty of loyalty] becomes directly liable to the aggrieved party.” 89 Ill. App. 3d at 455, 411 N.E.2d at 1070; accord Restatement (Third) of Restitution and Unjust Enrichment § 43 cmt. g (Am. L. Inst. 2011) (“Benefits derived from a fiduciary’s breach of duty may therefore be recovered from third parties, not themselves under any special duty to the claimant, who acquire such benefits with notice of the breach.”) But as Plaintiffs admit, this theory of unjust enrichment still requires a showing that the third party in question had notice or knowledge of the breach when accepting the benefit in question. For the reasons already stated, the court concludes that no reasonable jury could find that the Fox Defendants had knowledge of the breach of duty in this case.

In a similar vein, Plaintiffs cite Pro-Pac, Inc. v. WOW Logistics Co. for the proposition that “[a] person who obtains a benefit . . . in consequence of another’s breach of [a fiduciary duty] is liable in restitution to the person to whom the duty is owed.” 721 F.3d 781, 787 (7th Cir. 2013) (quoting Restatement (Third) of Restitution & Unjust Enrichment § 43(c)). But in Pro-Pac—a case decided under Wisconsin law—the Seventh Circuit discussed the possibility of the plaintiff recovering under an unjust enrichment theory only after affirming a bankruptcy court’s determination that the defendant had aided and abetted a third party’s breach of fiduciary duty owed to the plaintiff. See 721 F.3d at 782–84, 787 (explaining that the third party breached its fiduciary duty by diverting a deal from the plaintiff to the defendant, and that the plaintiff might be entitled to restitution from the defendant of the value the defendant obtained from the deal). The Seventh Circuit provided no discussion of how Section 43(c) of the Third Restatement applies where, as here, there is no reasonable basis for finding that the party from whom restitution is being sought (Fox) tortiously induced (or was otherwise liable for) another party’s alleged breach of fiduciary duty. The courts in Plaintiffs’ other cited cases did not address that issue, either. See Martin, 163 Ill. 2d at 56, 643 N.E.2d at 745 (considering only whether the breaching party had a duty to return the benefit he obtained); Happy R Sec., LLC v. Agri-Sources, LLC, 2013 IL App (3d) 120509, ¶ 44, 988 N.E.2d 972, 982 (stating in dicta that Section 43 “discuss[es] restitution in the context of a breach of fiduciary duty”). For these reasons, Plaintiffs’ unjust enrichment claim fails.

III. Class Certification

The court previously denied Plaintiffs’ motion for class certification without prejudice. T.S. v. Twentieth Century Fox Television, 334 F.R.D. 518, 541 (N.D. Ill. 2020) (“the January 16, 2020 opinion”). Plaintiffs have filed a renewed motion for class certification [351] along with a motion to amend their complaint by adding H.C. as a class representative [365]. As explained below, the court grants Plaintiffs’ motion to amend their complaint, and grants in part and denies in part the motion to certify the class.

A. Motion to Amend Complaint or, Alternatively, Add Class Representative

The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure provide that leave to amend a pleading should be freely given “when justice so requires.” FED. R. CIV. P. 15(a)(2). When assessing such a request, courts typically consider whether granting or denying leave to amend will prejudice the parties. See 6 Wright & Miller, Fed. Prac. & Proc. Civ. § 1487 (3d ed. 2021) (“This entails an inquiry into [1] the hardship to the moving party if leave to amend is denied, [2] the reasons for the moving party failing to include the material to be added in the original pleading, and [3] the injustice resulting to the party opposing the motion should it be granted.”); accord Kasak v. Vill. of Bedford Park, 552 F. Supp. 2d. 787, 793–94 (N.D. Ill. 2008) (granting leave to amend where new claim would not affect defendants’ pending summary judgment motion, and prejudice plaintiff would face outweighed prejudice to defendants).

Plaintiffs have requested leave to amend their Second Amended Complaint [88] solely for the purpose of adding H.C. as a class representative. (See Pls.’ Mot. to Amend Compl. or to Permit Consideration of H.C. as Potential Class Representative [365] (hereinafter “Mot. to Amend”) at 1 & n.1.) They offer H.C. in response to concerns that the court raised in its January 16, 2020 opinion denying class certification. Plaintiffs now propose three classes. The first, labeled “Class 1—Increased Confinement Class,” would include “[a]ll youth detained at the JTDC for at least 24 consecutive hours during the Empire filming periods” who were “confined to their pods more than they otherwise would [have] been because of the filming” (Pls.’ Renewed Mot. for Class Cert. [351] (hereinafter “Renewed Class Mot.”) at 6.) In the alternative, Plaintiffs have identified six subclasses within Class 1, depending on the type of off-pod activity that detainees allegedly were denied due to filming. (Id. at 6–7.) Subclass 1(f) would consist of detainees who were subject to “severe confinement,” meaning that they did not leave their pods for at least 24 hours consecutively. (Mot. to Amend at 3; Renewed Class Mot. at 7.) Because neither T.S. nor Q.B. were confined to their pods for at least 24 consecutive hours during filming, Plaintiffs have proposed the addition of H.C. to satisfy Rule 23(a)(3)’s typicality requirement for Subclass 1(f). Again, Plaintiffs believe that this subclass is unnecessary, but they have proposed it in the event the court determines that Class 1’s injuries are not constitutionally cognizable. (Mot. to Amend at 3; Renewed Class Mot. at 27.)

In support of their motion, Plaintiffs have provided a redline comparison of the Second Amended Complaint and the proposed Third Amended Complaint. (See Redline, Ex. 2 to Mot. to Amend [365-2].) Aside from the addition of allegations concerning H.C. (see Redline at 2–3, 23), the only other changes are corrections to allegations that Plaintiffs now acknowledge were inaccurate in light of discovery. (See id. at 13, 16, 18–20.)²⁰ According to the Third Amended Complaint, H.C. and the other residents of Pod 3J normally left the pod every day for activities, such as recreation, school, and programming, but on multiple days during filming, H.C. and the other residents were confined to their pod for the entire day. (Third Am. Compl. ¶ 53, Ex. 2 to Renewed Class Mot [365-2].)

Defendants oppose amendment of the complaint and H.C.'s addition as a class representative. They argue that a declaration submitted by Plaintiffs' counsel in support of Subclass 1(f) contained factual inaccuracies. (See Defs.' Opp'n to Mot. to Amend [374] at 1–3.) Specifically, Plaintiffs' counsel created a chart that purported to summarize the number of juvenile detainees who did not leave their pods for at least 24 consecutive hours. (See Ex. A to Weil Decl. 6/15/20 [351-2].) The chart relied solely on the JTDC's "DC5 Movement Logs," which are Microsoft Excel spreadsheets that track the movement of all detainees. (Weil Decl. 6/15/20 ¶ 3.) Plaintiffs concede that this declaration contained unintentional errors, but they insist that H.C. is nonetheless a suitable class representative. (Pls.' Reply in Support of Mot. to Amend [380] at 1; Pls.' Status Report 8/2/20 [388] (acknowledging that "[t]he missing data renders the DC5 logs insufficient, standing alone, to supply reliable "no movement" figures set out in the ECF 375-1 table").) Plaintiffs have submitted a supplemental chart that attempts to address the errors in the original declaration. (See Weil Decl. 8/7/20, Ex. A to Pls.' Suppl. Filing Pursuant to Rule 23(a)(1) [390-1].) In any event, Defendants have been able to conduct some discovery already, including a deposition of H.C. on August 4, 2020. (See generally H.C. Dep., Ex. O to Defs.' Class Opp'n [398-3]; see also H.C. Responses to Defense Rule 33 Discovery of July 14, 2020, Ex. 3 to Pls.' Reply in Support of Mot. to Amend [380-1].)

The court agrees with Plaintiffs that they would suffer hardship if they are unable to add H.C. because Subclass 1(f) would be left without a class representative. Plaintiffs' failure to add H.C. as a named plaintiff until now is an understandable response to the court's January 16, 2020 opinion. By contrast, any prejudice to Defendants would be minimal; indeed, discovery pertaining to H.C. is already underway and should not take long to complete. Accordingly, the court grants Plaintiffs' motion to amend their complaint.

B. Renewed Motion to Certify Class

With H.C. added as a named plaintiff, the court turns to the renewed motion for class certification. In response to this court's January 16, 2020 opinion denying their first motion for class certification, Plaintiffs have made significant changes to their class definition. Rather than attempting to certify a class of all juveniles detained at the JTDC during the filming of Empire, Plaintiffs now propose three classes that they believe will satisfy Rule 23(a)(3)'s typicality requirement: (1) detainees subject to additional confinement, (2) detainees who experienced "degraded visitation," and (3) detainees subject to overcrowding. (Renewed Class Mot. at 2, 6–7.) All three classes are limited to detainees who were at the JTDC for at least 24 hours consecutively. (Id.)

Specifically, Plaintiffs have offered the following class definitions:

Class 1—Increased confinement class: All youth detained at the JTDC for at least 24 consecutive hours during the Empire filming periods. Each member of this proposed class was confined to their pods more than they otherwise would [have] been because of the filming of Empire in the JTDC facility.

In the alternative, Plaintiffs have divided Class 1 into subclasses. . . . [:]

Subclass 1(a)—LME subclass—All youth detained at the JTDC for at least 24 consecutive hours during the Empire filming periods who did not receive at least one hour of Large Muscle Exercise ("LME") recreation off-pod during any day of the filming periods.

Subclass 1(b)—Outdoor recreation subclass—All youth detained at the JTDC for at least 24 consecutive hours during the Empire filming who did not receive scheduled outdoor recreation during the filming periods or whose outdoor recreation was not scheduled because of the filming of Empire in the JTDC facility.

Subclass 1(c)—School break recreation subclass—All youth detained at the JTDC for at least 24 consecutive hours during the Empire filming periods who did not receive off-pod recreation or programming in addition to one hour of LME during each day of the June and August filming periods because of the filming of Empire in the JTDC facility.

Subclass 1(d)—School subclass—All youth detained at the JTDC for at least 24 consecutive hours during the Empire filming periods who were detained on residential pods during the July filming period who did not travel to the Nancy B. Jefferson school each day for class.

Subclass 1(e)—Program subclass—All youth detained at the JTDC for at least 24 consecutive hours during the Empire filming periods who were scheduled to participate in off-pod programs like Free Write, Karma Garden, or off-pod activities like commissary or game room but who did not do so because of the Empire filming.

Subclass 1(f)—Severe confinement subclass—All youth detained at the JTDC for at least 24 consecutive hours during the Empire filming periods who did not leave their pods for at least 24 consecutive hours because of schedule disruptions caused by the filming of Empire. For this subclass, Plaintiffs propose a new class representative, H.C. . . .

Class 2. All youth detained at the JTDC for at least 24 consecutive hours who had family visitation during the June and July filming periods.

Class 3. All youth detained at the JTDC for at least 24 consecutive hours during the Empire filming periods who were . . . on pods with populations that exceeded safe functional operating capacity.

(Id. at 6–7.)

Plaintiffs bear the burden of showing that a proposed class complies with Rule 23, “but they need not make that showing to a degree of absolute certainty.” Messner v. Northshore Univ. HealthSystem, 669 F.3d 802, 811 (7th Cir. 2012). “It is sufficient if each disputed requirement has been proven by a preponderance of evidence.” Id. A court may look beyond the pleadings to determine whether class certification is appropriate, because “[o]n issues affecting class certification, [] a court may not simply assume the truth of the matters as asserted by the plaintiff.” Id. If there are factual disputes, “the court must receive evidence and resolve the disputes before deciding whether to certify the class.” Id. (internal quotation omitted). This inquiry may involve “some overlap with the merits of the plaintiff’s underlying claim,” Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Dukes, 564 U.S. 338, 351 (2011), but class certification is not a “dress rehearsal for a trial on the merits,” Messner, 669 F.3d at 811.

Because the court has granted summary judgment with respect to Plaintiffs’ constitutional claims on the basis of qualified immunity, as well as the inducement and unjust enrichment claims against the Fox Defendants, the court’s class certification analysis is limited to the remaining state-law claims against Defendants Dixon and Cook County. In other words, the court will consider whether certification of the proposed classes and subclasses is appropriate for the breach of fiduciary duty and indemnification claims against the County Defendants.

1. Rule 23(a) Requirements

Ascertainability

As explained in the January 16, 2020 opinion, courts have recognized that a proposed class must be ascertainable, meaning it must be “defined clearly and based on objective criteria.” Mullins v. Direct Digit., LLC, 795 F.3d 654, 659 (7th Cir. 2015). If a proposed class sweeps in a large proportion of persons who could not have been injured by a defendant’s conduct, the class is overbroad. See Oshana v. Coca-Cola Co., 472 F.3d 506, 514 (7th Cir. 2006). The court previously expressed concerns that the Plaintiffs’ proposed class included some individuals who could not have been harmed because they were released shortly after arriving at the “Alpha” intake unit and thus were never assigned to a pod. T.S., 334 F.R.D. at 527–28. Plaintiffs have attempted to correct potential overbreadth problems by limiting each of the three proposed classes to detainees who were at the JTDC for at least 24 consecutive hours. (Renewed Class Mot. at 2, 6–7.) Plaintiffs emphasize that even “Alpha” intake detainees are typically provided with daily off-pod recreation. (Id. at 8 (citing Dunlap Supp. Rpt. ¶ 4).) Thus, intake detainees who spent at least 24 hours at the JTDC may have been affected by Empire filming if they did not receive off-pod recreation.

Defendants argue that the proposed classes are still overbroad for several reasons. First, they point out that not all detainees were juveniles—between 6 and 14 detainees were adults on each day of the June and July filming periods. (Defs.’ Opp’n to Renewed Mot. [397] at 21 (citing Opp’n Ex. M 21:3–22:20 & Opp’n Ex. L).) Second, they argue that T.S. and Q.B. (as well as presumably H.C.) lack standing to represent female detainees, who are housed separately and receive separate schooling, recreation, and programming. (Defs.’ Opp’n to Renewed Mot. at 22 (citing Opp’n Ex. M 108:1–109:10).) Third, Defendants argue that Alpha detainees should be excluded from the class definitions because they do not attend school and are more likely to be restricted from recreation. (Defs.' Opp'n to Renewed Mot. at 22 (citing Opp'n Ex. AA and Opp'n Ex. BB ¶ 4).)

The court is satisfied that Plaintiffs' adjustments to their proposed classes have mitigated any potential overbreadth problems. First, the court is not concerned that the presence of a handful of adult detainees will have a significant impact on the certifiability of the proposed classes.²¹ See Messner, 669 F.3d at 825–26 (reversing denial of class certification where only 2.4 percent of putative class members could not have been harmed by defendant's conduct). Second, Defendants' arguments regarding female detainees go more to typicality and adequacy than overbreadth. As Plaintiffs explain, female pods are segregated from male pods, but female detainees still attend school on the JTDC's second floor, receive off-pod recreation, and participate in programming. Accordingly, they may have been subject to increased confinement during filming. (Renewed Mot. at 5.) Finally, the court agrees that the 24-consecutive-hours requirement for all proposed classes ensures that even Alpha detainees are among those who would normally have received some off-pod movement. As the court explains below, the addition of subclasses within Class 1, the "increased confinement" class, means that Alpha detainees will be included in a subclass only if they actually would have left their pods for recreation. The court is therefore no longer concerned about overbreadth, and now turns to Rule 23(a)'s four requirements.

Numerosity

To satisfy numerosity, Plaintiffs must show that the proposed classes are "so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable." FED. R. CIV. P. 23(a)(2). Generally, classes of forty or more members are sufficiently numerous. Anderson v. Weinert Enters., Inc., 986 F.3d 773, ²¹ Plaintiffs' class definitions arguably exclude adult detainees by referring to "youth," but the parties do not address this argument.

777 (7th Cir. 2021). Even if a plaintiff cannot provide precise numbers at the certification stage, “a good faith estimate is sufficient to satisfy the numerosity requirement where it is difficult to assess the exact class membership.” Buycks-Roberson v. Citibank Fed. Sav. Bank, 162 F.R.D. 322, 329 (N.D. Ill. 1995) (quotation marks and alterations omitted). Defendants do not challenge numerosity under Rule 23(a)(1). (Defs.’ Opp’n to Renewed Mot. at 23.) Nonetheless, as the party seeking class certification, Plaintiffs bear the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that their proposed classes are sufficiently numerous. Anderson, 986 F.3d at 777 (citing Chi. Tchrs. Union, Local No. 1 v. Bd. of Educ. of City of Chi., 797 F.3d 426, 433 (7th Cir. 2015)).

Class 1, the “increased confinement” class, easily satisfies numerosity. More than 300 juvenile detainees were confined at the JTDC during each of the Empire filming sessions, and Plaintiffs maintain that the vast majority of those detainees were detained for at least 24 consecutive hours. (Renewed Mot. at 9.) The numerosity of subclass 1(a), the off-pod LME subclass, is less certain, but Plaintiffs point the court to the number of detainees who were confined to their pods for at least 24 hours (Subclass 1(f)) as evidence in support of finding numerosity for Subclass 1(a) because those same detainees were presumably denied off-pod LME, as well. (See Ex. A to Weil Decl. 8/7/20.)²² The court agrees that this is a logical assumption and finds that Subclass 1(a) satisfies numerosity.

For Subclass 1(b), the outdoor recreation subclass, Plaintiffs have submitted an exhibit showing the recreation schedule for one of the JTDC’s centers, showing that multiple pods were scheduled for outdoor recreation every day between June 1, 2015 and June 13, 2015. (See Ex. B to Weil Decl. 6/15/20 [351-2].) The first Empire filming period spanned June 22–26, 2015, so the schedule set forth in Plaintiffs' exhibit is not clear evidence of the frequency of outdoor recreation later in June, much less in July and August. Nonetheless, given that Defendants have not challenged the numerosity of this or any subclass, the court is willing to assume—solely for purposes of class certification—that on a typical day in June, at least two pods would have been scheduled for outdoor recreation. If each pod contained at least a dozen detainees, and there were twelve days of filming across all three filming periods, then well over forty detainees could have been affected.

Subclass 1(c), the school-break recreation subclass, consists of detainees who did not receive “extra” off-pod activity during the school breaks in June and August. According to Earl Dunlap’s supplemental expert report, all detainees, regardless of behavioral level, would have been eligible for additional time off-pod when school was not in session. (See Dunlap Suppl. Expert Rpt., Ex. 1 to Renewed Class Mot. [351-1] ¶ 5; Ex. 10 to Dunlap Suppl. Expert Rpt. (showing “break tournament!” between August 17, 2014 and August 29, 2014).) Plaintiffs again point to counsel’s declaration as evidence that well over 100 detainees would be part of this subclass. (See Ex. A to Weil Decl. 8/7/20.) As with Subclass 1(a), the court is willing to assume that detainees confined for at least 24 consecutive hours during the June and August filming periods would also have been denied extra school-break recreation. Subclass 1(c) therefore satisfies numerosity.

Subclass 1(d), the school subclass, consists of detainees who did not travel to classes at the Nancy B. Jefferson school during the July filming period. Plaintiffs attest that this would have included all detainees at the JTDC, except for those in the Alpha intake pods. The court agrees that this subclass is sufficiently numerous.

Subclass 1(e), the programming subclass, includes detainees who were deprived of programming during the filming periods. Plaintiffs contend that the cancellation of Free Write alone affected 41 detainees in June. (Renewed Mot. at 10 (citing Ex. A to Weil Decl. 6/15/20).)

Although the cited declaration does not make clear how Plaintiffs arrived at this number, the court notes that other parts of the record suggest that at least 40 detainees may have missed programming opportunities during the filming periods. (See Renewed Mot. at 25; PSOAF ¶ 54.)

Subclass 1(f), the “severe confinement” subclass, is sufficiently numerous for the same reasons as Subclasses 1(a) and 1(c). (See Ex. A to Weil Decl. 8/7/20.)

Class 2, the “degraded visitation” class, includes all detainees who had visitors during the June and July filming periods, when the Fox Defendants used the room where visitation typically occurred. Detainees in this class received visitors in a classroom that was approximately 10 percent smaller than the normal visitation room. (See Defs.’ SOF ¶ 66; Resp. to Defs.’ SOF ¶ 66.) Because dozens of detainees receive visitors every day, this class is sufficiently numerous. (See PSOAF ¶ 42 (“Detainees have two one-hour visiting slots per week.”); Resp. to PSOAF ¶ 42 (not disputing this fact).)

Finally, Class 3, the “overcrowding” class, consists of detainees who were assigned to pods that exceeded the JTDC’s own guidelines. The JTDC’s pods contain 16 or 18 single-bed rooms, but the JTDC’s written policies provide that the “functional operating capacity” of those pods is 12 or 14 residents, respectively. (See PSOAF ¶¶ 40.) Based on undisputed pod population records during the filming periods, the court concludes that this class satisfies numerosity. (See PSOAF ¶¶ 40–41; Resp. to PSOAF ¶¶ 40–41 (conceding the existence of the JTDC’s policy and the pod population records, but noting that no pod housed more detainees than the number of single-bed rooms in the pod).)

Commonalit.

Rule 23(a) requires Plaintiffs to show that there are “questions of law or fact common to the class.” FED. R. CIV. P. 23(a)(2). A single common question may be sufficient, so long as “determination of [the] truth or falsity [of a common contention] will resolve an issue that is central to the validity of each one of the claims in one stroke.” Phillips v. Sheriff of Cook Cnty., 828 F.3d 541, 550 (7th Cir. 2016) (quoting Wal-Mart, 564 U.S. at 350). This inquiry may “entail some overlap with the merits of the plaintiff’s underlying claim.” Phillips, 828 F.3d at 550 (quoting Wal-Mart, 564 U.S. at 351). A common question need not resolve every issue in the case. Phillips, 828 F.3d at 551. Supplemental proceedings may be appropriate “if, for example, the common question relates to liability of the defendant to a class and separate hearings are needed to resolve the payments due to each member.” Spano v. The Boeing Co., 633 F.3d 574, 585 (7th Cir. 2011).

The court previously concluded that Plaintiffs had satisfied commonality by identifying at least one common question: “whether Empire filming disturbed operations at the JTDC in ways that violated class members’ constitutional rights,” and specifically whether “allowing Empire to film at the JTDC is a legitimate justification for altering the normal operations of the facility.” T.S., 334 F.R.D. at 528, 530. Because the court has granted summary judgment with respect to Plaintiffs’ constitutional claims, however, it must now reexamine whether Plaintiffs have met this requirement for the remaining state-law claims. Plaintiffs identify the following common questions regarding breach of fiduciary duty: (1) whether Defendant Dixon owed JTDC detainees a fiduciary duty, (2) whether Dixon breached that duty, and (3) whether the breach proximately caused damages. (Renewed Mot. at 29 (citing T.S., 334 F.R.D. at 537).) Plaintiffs intend to offer common evidence that (1) Defendant Dixon assumed the position of guardian over the JTDC’s detainees, (2) Dixon breached his duty to ensure the “safety and general well-being” of his wards by eliminating or degrading services for his own benefit, and (3) Dixon’s breach proximately caused injuries to the classes in the form of psychological harm and increased risk of violence. (Renewed Mot. at 29–30.) Defendants concede that Plaintiffs have identified common questions but argue that they are “too superficial” to satisfy Rule 23(a)(2). (Defs.’ Opp’n to Renewed Mot. at 23.)

The court concludes that Plaintiffs have identified at least two common questions that can be proved with common evidence. Specifically, the first two elements of their breach of fiduciary duty claim—(1) whether Defendant Dixon owed JTDC detainees a fiduciary duty, and (2) whether Dixon breached that duty by allowing filming at the JTDC—are clearly “capable of classwide resolution.” Phillips, 828 F.3d at 550 (quoting Wal-Mart, 564 U.S. at 350). These questions pertain to all three classes and the subclasses within Class 1. The third element of a breach of fiduciary duty, proximate cause, may be more challenging to prove with common evidence, but the first two common questions are sufficient to satisfy Rule 23(a)(2).

Typicality

Rule 23(a)(3) requires that the “claims or defenses of the representative parties are typical of the claims or defenses of the class.” FED. R. CIV. P. 23(a)(3). “A claim is typical if it ‘arises from the same event or practice or course of conduct that gives rise to the claims of other class members and . . . [the named plaintiff’s] claims are based on the same legal theory.” Oshana, 472 F.3d at 514 (quoting Rosario v. Livaditis, 963 F.2d 1013, 1018 (7th Cir. 1992)). The claims of the representatives need not be identical to those of the class members, but they should have the “same essential characteristics as the claims of the class at large.” Oshana, 472 F.3d at 514 (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). In other words, “there must be enough congruence between the named representative’s claim and that of the unnamed members of the class to justify allowing the named party to litigate on behalf of the group.” Spano, 633 F.3d at 586.

In the January 16, 2020 opinion, the court noted that “[s]ome of the conduct giving rise to Q.B. and T.S.’s claims appear to be typical of the class, but other alleged deprivations that they experienced appear to be unique.” T.S., 334 F.R.D. at 530–31. The court recommended narrowing the class “to include only the alleged deprivations that are common to every class member” or, alternatively, proposing subclasses. Id. at 531. In response to these concerns, Plaintiffs have proposed three classes and offered H.C. as a class representative for Subclass 1(f). (See Renewed Mot. at 15 n.2.) The court will first describe the classes or subclasses that satisfy the typicality requirement, and then describe those that do not.

Class 1, the increased confinement class, includes detainees who were subject to increased confinement for a variety of reasons (denial of off-pod LME, outdoor recreation, “extra” school-break recreation, school in the Nancy B. Jefferson classrooms, and/or programming). Plaintiffs insist that subclasses are unnecessary because the increased confinement stemmed from the same course of conduct: Defendant Dixon’s decision to allow the filming of Empire at the JTDC. (Id. at 12–13.) They also emphasize that each subclass is bringing claims based on the same legal theory: that Defendant Dixon breached his fiduciary duty to detainees at the JTDC, and that the breach proximately caused them harm. (Id. at 13.) According to Dr. Kraus’s expert report, “any increased restrictions on juveniles are psychologically harmful,” and “any youth detained at the JTDC who spent more time on the pod than he or she otherwise would have was harmed.” (Id. at 14 (citing Kraus Rpt. ¶ 6).)

The court agrees with Defendants, however, that the reason for a given detainee’s increased confinement matters and that Class 1 does not satisfy typicality in the absence of subclasses. Without dividing class members into subclasses, it will be difficult, if not impossible, to prove that the decision to permit filming at the JTDC proximately caused detainees’ increased confinement—a separate question from the amount of damages they may have incurred as a result of that confinement. To take just one example, Empire filming may not have caused the cancellation of off-pod recreation for H.C.’s pod on one day in July because a fight broke out around the time that pod members would have left to go to the gym. (See Defs.’ Opp’n to Renewed Mot. at 16 (citing Robinson Decl. of 7/17/20, Opp’n Ex. MM ¶¶ 17–20).) Defendants have challenged typicality only as to Subclasses 1(c), 1(d), and 1(f), (Defs.’ Opp’n to Renewed Mot. at 23), but the court addresses the issue with respect to each class and subclass for completeness.

Subclass 1(a), the off-pod LME subclass, consists of detainees who did not leave their pods for LME on at least one day during the Empire filming periods. T.S., Q.B., and H.C. each claim that they received LME on their pods—instead of traveling to the yard, the gym, or the game room—on at least one day.²³ (PSOAF ¶ 10.) Because their claims are typical of the subclass that they seek to represent, this subclass satisfies Rule 23(a)(3). Defendants emphasize that whether Empire filming was the cause of a given pod not receiving off-pod recreation on a given day is a fact-intensive inquiry (Defs.’ Opp’n to Renewed Mot. at 34–35), but that alone does not justify denying certification of this subclass.

All named plaintiffs claim to have lost extra school-break recreation, such as tournaments, that they allegedly would have received but for the filming. (PSOAF ¶¶ 10, 34.) Defendants nevertheless challenge the typicality of Subclass 1(c) because H.C. never participated in a tournament despite opportunities to do so later in 2015. (Defs.’ Opp’n to Renewed Mot. at 36 n.5 (citing H.C. Dep. at 48:8–49:4).) It is similarly unclear whether T.S. or Q.B. would have participated in a tournament during the June or August filming periods. (Defs.’ Opp’n to Renewed Mot. at 36 n.5; but see T.S. Dep. at 117:1–9 (stating that T.S. recalled participating in a basketball tournament while on a school break at the JTDC).) At the time of T.S. and Q.B.’s depositions, Plaintiffs had not yet asserted claims on the basis of a right to extra recreation during school breaks, so T.S. and Q.B. were not asked about tournaments at their depositions. (Defs.’ Opp’n to Renewed Mot. at 36 n.5.) Plaintiffs respond that, according to Dunlap’s expert report, break activities were not limited to tournaments, and all residents would have been brought off their pods for other recreation activities. (Pls.’ Reply in Support of Renewed Mot. [400] at 18 (citing Dunlap Suppl. Expert Rpt. ¶¶ 5, 8.) This report satisfies the court that the named Plaintiffs’ claims are sufficiently typical of those in Subclass 1(c), regardless of whether T.S., Q.B., or H.C. personally participated in tournaments.

²³ Defendants continue to dispute whether T.S. was denied off-pod recreation, noting that the JTDC’s records offer conflicting evidence regarding his pod’s recreation schedule on the day in question. (Defs.’ Opp’n to Renewed Mot. at 33–34.)

Next, Subclass 1(d), the school subclass, satisfies typicality because T.S. and H.C. claim that they had school instruction on their pods on at least one day during the July filming period. (PSOAF ¶ 10.) Defendants concede that this happened because of filming but dispute whether conducting the classes in the pod common areas was harmful. (Defs.' Opp'n to Renewed Mot. at 36–37.) Plaintiffs are no longer arguing that these classes were less effective; instead, they contend that the loss of movement to the Nancy B. Jefferson school was psychologically harmful, in that it contributed to increased confinement on the pods. (Renewed Mot. at 15.) With this narrower definition, Subclass 1(d) satisfies typicality.

Subclass 1(e), the programming subclass, also satisfies typicality because T.S. and H.C. both missed one Free Write session during filming. (PSOAF ¶ 10(a), (c).) Defendants do not dispute that the sessions were cancelled or that T.S. and H.C. were otherwise eligible to attend. (Resp. to PSOAF ¶ 10(a), (c).)

T.S. and Q.B.'s claims are not typical of those in Subclass 1(f), the "severe confinement" subclass, because they were not confined to their pods for 24 consecutive hours during the filming periods. Plaintiffs acknowledge this and have proposed the addition of H.C. as a class representative. (See Renewed Mot. at 15 n.2.) Defendants argue the evidence that H.C. himself spent 24 consecutive hours on his pod is suspect because some residents on his pod left to watch a movie on the day in question. (Defs.' Opp'n to Renewed Mot. at 39 (citing Justice Center Shift Report of 7/13/15, Opp'n Ex. LL).) At the class certification stage, however, Plaintiffs need not prove their claims to an absolute certainty. Messner, 669 F.3d at 811 ("It is sufficient if each disputed requirement has been proven by a preponderance of evidence.") There is evidence that H.C. was confined to his pod for at least 24 hours consecutively, so his claims are typical of those of Subclass 1(f) for purposes of Rule 23(a)(3).

Finally, Class 3, the overcrowding subclass, satisfies typicality. According to the JTDC's pod capacity logs, Q.B.'s pod exceeded its functional capacity by one resident during filming.

T.S., 334 F.R.D. at 534. That resident was moved from pod 3A or 3B (Alpha intake pods), which were closed due to filming, to Q.B.'s pod. Id. Plaintiffs allege that overcrowding creates safety risks and can be psychologically harmful to detainees. (Renewed Mot. at 16.) Because Q.B.'s claims are typical of those in Class 3, the class satisfies Rule 23(a)(3).

By contrast, the court concludes that Subclass 1(b) and Class 2 do not satisfy typicality. Turning to Subclass 1(b): none of the named plaintiffs alleges that he was personally denied scheduled outdoor recreation during the filming periods, or that outdoor recreation was not scheduled for his pod because of the Empire filming. Instead, T.S. and Q.B. attest that they were confined to their pods for LME for at least one day and that they lost "break rec" during the June and August filming periods. (PSOAF ¶¶ 10(a)–(b).) H.C. similarly does not claim to have been denied outdoor recreation, arguing only that he lost "break rec" in June and August. (Id. ¶ 10(c).) Because none of the named plaintiffs claims to have personally experienced the loss of outdoor recreation that they otherwise would have received, they lack standing to represent Subclass 1(b). See Spokeo, Inc. v. Robins, 136 S. Ct. 1540, 1547 n.6 (2016) ("[E]ven named plaintiffs who represent a class must allege and show that they personally have been injured, not that injury has been suffered by other, unidentified members of the class to which they belong." (internal quotation marks and citation omitted)). In any event, there is likely substantial overlap between this proposed subclass and Subclasses 1(a) and 1(c), which claim more generally that members were denied off-pod recreation, whether indoors or outdoors.

Class 2, the "degraded visitation" class, also cannot survive typicality. The JTDC moved visitation to a different location during the June and July filming periods (no Empire filming occurred in the visitation room during the August filming period). As Defendants note, the JTDC used a different classroom during the June filming period than it did in July. Both classrooms used eight tables, but according to JTDC documents prepared in anticipation of filming, the placement of those tables within the rooms varied significantly between June and July. (See Opp'n to Renewed Mot. at 6 (citing Opp'n Ex. C at 6, 13).) Specifically, the June layout placed six of the eight desks along the walls of the classroom, with two desks in the center, while the July layout placed all eight desks in the center of the room in two rows of four desks. (Id.) Neither T.S. nor Q.B. had visitation during the July filming period,²⁴ and H.C. has not made any allegations regarding reduced privacy during visitation. (See T.S. Dep. at 127:17–129:7, Opp'n Ex. N [398-3]; Q.B. Dep. at 65:13-66:3, Opp'n Ex. P [398-3]; H.C. Dep. at 54:19–57:19, Opp'n Ex. O [398-3].) Because the basis for Plaintiffs' claims hinges on the reduced privacy that detainees may have experienced during visitation due to the spacing of the tables, the named Plaintiffs are not proper representatives of detainees who had visitation in July.

Adequacy

Rule 23(a)'s requirement that “the representative parties will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class” implicates both the named representatives and the proposed class counsel. FED. R. CIV. P. 23(a)(4). Specifically, the “claims and interests of the named Plaintiffs must not conflict with those of the class, the class representatives must have sufficient interest in the outcome of the case, and class counsel must be experienced and competent.” Van v. Ford Motor Co., 332 F.R.D. 249, 282 (N.D. Ill. 2019) (citing Retired Chi. Police Ass'n v. City of Chicago, 7 F.3d 584, 598 (7th Cir. 1993)). The experience and competence of class counsel includes “counsel's work on the case to date, counsel's class action experience, counsel's knowledge of the applicable law, and the resources counsel will commit to the case.” Reliable Money Order, Inc. v. McKnight Sales Co., 704 F.3d 489, 498 n.7 (7th Cir. 2013).

In the January 16, 2020 opinion, the court invited Plaintiffs to provide updated biographies of Ms. Chardon and Mr. Weil, and to explain how the addition of Loevy & Loevy would affect class representation in this case. T.S., 334 F.R.D. at 535. Ms. Chardon has since withdrawn as ²⁴ Q.B. alleges that his grandmother was not able to visit him on one day during Empire filming (see Third Am. Compl. ¶ 49), but Plaintiffs are not attempting to certify Class 2 on that basis.

Plaintiffs' counsel (Minute Entry of 7/21/20 [376]), so the court will focus on Mr. Weil and Loevy & Loevy's collective experience with class action litigation. While working for various law firms, Mr. Weil has represented clients in multi-district litigation, an ERISA class action, and a parens patriae action (a lawsuit brought by a state on behalf of its own citizens). (Renewed Mot. at 17.) This experience, combined with Mr. Weil's long history litigating this case, satisfies the court that he will perform adequately as class counsel. Mr. Weil is now associated with Loevy & Loevy, a firm that has extensive experience representing incarcerated people. The firm has committed to provide resources toward all phases of the litigation, including class certification, trial, appeal, and settlement negotiations. (Id. at 17–18.) Mr. Weil and his firm are adequate class counsel in this case.

Indeed, Defendants do not challenge the adequacy class counsel. They do argue, however, that T.S., Q.B., and H.C. are not adequate class representatives. (Defs.' Opp'n to Renewed Mot. at 43–44.) Specifically, Defendants suggest that T.S., Q.B., and H.C. have had minimal communication with their attorneys and have not been kept apprised of settlement negotiations. (Id. (citing H.C. Dep. at 26:11–13).) Defendants concede that putative class representatives need not be legal experts, but they nonetheless contend that the three proposed representatives have not met even minimum standards of supervision. (Id. at 44 (citing In re: Ocean Bank, No. 06 C 3515, 2007 WL 1063042, at * 8 (N.D. Ill. Apr. 9, 2007).) Defendants point out that H.C. seemed caught off-guard during his deposition on August 4, 2020, in that he had not seen the proposed Third Amended Complaint before it was filed on July 1, 2020, and was not familiar with the interrogatory responses his attorneys had prepared. (See H.C. Dep. at 28:1–10, 115:21–116:21, 118:4–10, 119:3–22.)

Plaintiffs respond that “understanding the minutia of a case is not a prerequisite to being a class representative.” (Pls.' Reply in Support of Class Cert. at 29 (quoting Murray v. New Cingular Wireless Servs., 232 F.R.D. 295, 300 (N.D. Ill. 2005).) With respect to keeping Plaintiffs apprised of progress, counsel reports that he was able to meet with T.S. but not Q.B. on January 30, 2020 at the Cook County Jail. (Pls.' Reply in Support of Class Cert. at 30 (citing Weil Decl. 9/25/20, Ex. 11 to Pls.' Reply).) Counsel did speak with Q.B. on February 25, 2020. (See Minute Entry of 6/24/20 [359] (ordering Plaintiffs to disclose the dates of any additional communications with their attorneys since August 7, 2018); Defs.' Opp'n to Renewed Mot. at 43.) With respect to H.C.'s deposition testimony, Mr. Weil attests that he showed H.C. the Second Amended Complaint before filing the Third Amended Complaint, and reviewed H.C.'s interrogatory responses with him before H.C. signed them. (Pls.' Reply in Support of Class Cert. at 30 (citing Weil Decl. 9/25/20 ¶¶ 10–11).)

The court concludes that T.S., Q.B., and H.C. are adequate class representatives for purposes of Rule 23(a)(4). Plaintiffs are correct that “[e]xperience teaches that it is counsel for the class representative and not the named parties, who direct and manage these actions.” Culver v. City of Milwaukee, 277 F.3d 908, 913 (7th Cir. 2002). Indeed, “[I]t is well established that a named plaintiff's lack of knowledge and understanding of the case is insufficient to deny class certification, unless his ignorance unduly impacts his ability to vigorously prosecute the action.” In re Ocean Bank, 2007 WL 1063042, at *5 (quoting Murray, 232 F.R.D. at 300). Here, H.C.'s missteps during his deposition are not so significant as to defeat his adequacy as a class representative. The court is confident that counsel understands the need to continue updating T.S., Q.B., and H.C. about the litigation, including the possibility of a settlement, while recognizing that the COVID-19 pandemic has complicated their ability to meet in person.

To summarize, the remaining classes are: Subclass 1(a) (the off-pod LME subclass), Subclass 1(c) (the school-break recreation subclass), Subclass 1(d) (the school subclass), Subclass 1(e) (the programming subclass), Subclass 1(f) (the severe confinement class), and Class 3 (the overcrowding class).

2. Rule 23(b)(3) Requirements

Because Plaintiffs have shown that at least some of their proposed classes and subclasses satisfy the four requirements of Rule 23(a), the court now assesses whether they can meet the criteria of Rule 23(b)(3). To certify a class under Rule 23(b)(3), the court must find that common questions predominate over individual ones and that a class action is “superior to other available methods of adjudicating the controversy.” FED. R. CIV. P. 23(b)(3).

Predominance

The predominance requirement is “far more demanding” than the commonality requirement, and tests whether the proposed class is “sufficiently cohesive to warrant adjudication by representation.” Amchem Prods., Inc. v. Windsor, 521 U.S. 591, 623–24 (1997). The Rule 23(b)(3) analysis begins with the “elements of the underlying cause of action.” Messner, 669 F.3d at 815. “If, to make a prima facie showing on a given question, the members of a proposed class will need to present evidence that varies from member to member, then it is an individual question.” Id. (citation omitted). “If the same evidence will suffice for each member to make a prima facie showing, then it becomes a common question.” Id. Rule 23(b)(3) does not require “that each element of [a] claim is susceptible to classwide proof.” Alicea v. Cnty. of Cook, No. 18 C 5381, 2019 WL 3318140, at *3 (N.D. Ill. July 24, 2019) (quoting Bell v. PNC Bank, Nat. Ass’n, 800 F.3d 360, 381 (7th Cir. 2015)). But the common questions must “represent a significant aspect of a case.” Messner, 669 F.3d at 815 (citation and internal quotation marks omitted); see also Tyson Foods, Inc. v. Bouaphakeo, 136 S. Ct. 1036, 1045 (2016) (“When one or more of the central issues in the action are common to the class and can be said to predominate, the action may be considered proper under Rule 23(b)(3) even though other important matters will have to be tried separately, such as damages or some affirmative defenses.”) (citation omitted).

Plaintiffs claim that Defendant Dixon breached a fiduciary duty to JTDC detainees by allowing Empire to film at the facility. To succeed on a claim for breach of fiduciary duty for damages under Illinois law, Plaintiffs must show that “(1) a fiduciary duty existed, (2) that duty was breached, and (3) the breach of the duty proximately caused damages.” Chi. Title Ins. Co. v. Sinikovic, 125 F. Supp. 3d 769, 777 (N.D. Ill. 2015) (citing Gross, 619 F.3d at 709). As explained above in the court’s summary judgment analysis, Defendant Dixon may have owed a fiduciary duty to detainees similar to that of a guardian to his wards. A reasonable jury could also conclude that Defendant Dixon breached that duty by approving the Empire filming. Plaintiffs can prove these elements with common evidence. More complicated is whether common questions predominate regarding the third element: whether the approval of filming proximately caused the specific harms alleged by each class or subclass.

In the January 16, 2020 opinion, the court concluded that “Plaintiffs need to show that [Dixon’s] decision had a class-wide effect on the detainees’ safety or well-being.” T.S., 334 F.R.D. at 538. For the Class 1 subclasses, Plaintiffs argue that the expert reports from Dunlap and Dr. Kraus constitute common evidence that increased confinement, regardless of the precise reason, was psychologically harmful to detainees. (Renewed Mot. at 27.) For Class 3, Plaintiffs again point to the expert reports as evidence that overcrowding on the pods was not only psychologically harmful, but also put detainees at greater risk of violence. (Id. at 28–29 (citing Dunlap Rpt. ¶ 57; Kraus Rpt. at ¶ 38).)²⁵

²⁵ Class 2, the visitation class, does not satisfy Rule 23(a). Even if it did, this class would fail Rule 23(b)(3) because Plaintiffs have not offered common evidence that the spacing of the tables in the alternate classrooms offered reduced privacy during visitation. (See Pl.’s Resp. to Defs.’ SOF ¶ 66 (not disputing that there was only 10% less space (by square footage) in the classroom used for visitation during filming compared to the typical room).) The normal visitation room had 12 tables, but the evidence suggests that the alternate visitation rooms had 8 tables. (PSOAF ¶ 42–43.) Empirically, it is unclear if there was in fact less space between the tables and/or visitors in the classrooms. And as Defendants observe, the precise spacing of the tables matters only to the extent that the alternate visitation room was full at a given time. (Defs.’ Opp’n to Renewed Mot. at 39–40.) Individual inquiries into the number of people in the alternate visitation room and their locations at a given time would render this class unmanageable. Without common evidence, Plaintiffs cannot make a prima facie showing that the loss of privacy amounted to a breach of Defendant Dixon’s fiduciary duty to detainees.

Defendants assert that proving a breach and subsequent harm to detainees will require extensive individual inquiries. (Defs.' Opp'n to Renewed Mot. at 32–33, 41–42.) Plaintiffs respond that the individual issues Defendants have identified concern the amount of damages that each detainee suffered. (Pls.' Reply in Support of Renewed Mot. at 11–12.) The court agrees that Plaintiffs may satisfy predominance “despite the need to make individualized damage determinations.” Mulvania, 850 F.3d at 859. Plaintiffs can use common evidence to show that Defendant Dixon had a fiduciary duty and that he breached that duty. But the expert reports alone are not common evidence that Defendant Dixon’s breach is what caused detainees to spend more time on their pods than they otherwise would have. Individual questions regarding the precise cause of a detainees’ increased confinement would predominate among Class 1 in the absence of subclasses.

Subclass 1(a), the off-pod LME subclass, does not satisfy predominance. The evidence necessary to prove whether, but for the filming, a particular pod would have received off-pod LME would vary from pod to pod, and even from detainee to detainee within a given pod. See Messner, 669 F.3d at 815 (“If, to make a prima facie showing on a given question, the members of a proposed class will need to present evidence that varies from member to member, then it is an individual question.”). To take just one example, on the day that Plaintiffs claim T.S. had on-pod recreation, another JTDC record states that his pod went to the gym. (See Defs.' Opp'n to Renewed Mot. at 15–16.) The jury would need to make an individual determination as to whether T.S. had off-pod recreation on a single day, and that determination might differ from whether the rest of the detainees in his pod had off-pod recreation. Those determinations would also not advance the claims of any other pod because detainees in each pod had their own recreation schedules. (See Steward Decl., Opp'n Ex. Q ¶ 13; May Dunlap Dep., Opp'n Ex. K 35:12–20.) Similarly, Defendants do not dispute that Q.B. had on-pod recreation on one day of filming, but it was not uncommon for Q.B.'s pod, which had a history of disciplinary problems, to have on-pod recreation due to safety concerns. (See Defs.' Opp'n to Renewed Mot. at 16.) A jury would need to consider whether it was the presence of the Empire crew or some other factor that resulted in Q.B.'s pod being limited to on-pod recreation. Because individual questions of causation would predominate over common questions of duty and breach, this subclass does not satisfy Rule 23(b)(3).

Subclass 1(c), the extra school-break recreation subclass, does satisfy the predominance requirement. Plaintiffs can use common evidence to show that all detainees would have received extra recreation opportunities during the June and August filming periods when school was not in session. According to Dunlap's supplemental expert report, "all kids, regardless of [behavior] level, would spend as much time off the 'Center' pods as possible . . . in addition to the one-hour of 'large muscle activity' recreation that they were normally provided." (Opp'n Ex. BB ¶¶ 4–5.) Defendants dispute whether detainees actually received "extra" recreation when Dunlap worked at the JTDC in 2014, the year before Empire filming. (Defs.' Opp'n to Renewed Mot. at 15.) But Plaintiffs need not establish that they will prevail on their claims at this stage. Should they ultimately be unable to do so, the court would dismiss all such claims for members of a class certified under Rule 23(b)(3).

Subclass 1(d), the school subclass, also satisfies predominance. Plaintiffs have presented evidence that almost all detainees would have attended school in the Nancy B. Jefferson classrooms during the July filming period. Defendants do not dispute that "this happened because of the filming," with the minor caveat that some detainees may have been in court, in the Alpha pods, or confined to their rooms for disciplinary reasons at the time. (Defs.' Opp'n to Renewed Mot. at 36.) Defendants also question whether offering classes on the pods instead of in classrooms was harmful, but this argument goes to the merits of Plaintiffs' claim rather than certification.

Subclass 1(e), the programming subclass, narrowly satisfies predominance. Although Plaintiffs have not provided a definitive list of programs that were scheduled but cancelled due to filming, there is evidence in the record that the following programs were cancelled: a program by the Chicago Alliance Against Sexual Exploitation, a University of Illinois nutrition education program, Karma Garden, and Free Write. (See PSOAF ¶¶ 37–38; Free Write Roster [400-10].)²⁶ At least some trips to the “commissary,” which took place in repurposed classrooms where detainees could purchase items or engage in activities like ping pong or video games, were cancelled because of filming. (PSOAF ¶¶ 39; Resp. to PSOAF ¶¶ 39.) To comply with Rule 23(b)(3), the court narrows the subclass definition to include detainees who would have attended these off-pod programs (as opposed to unspecified additional programs) during Empire filming.

Subclass 1(f), the severe confinement class, does not satisfy predominance. Plaintiffs have made repeated attempts to compile charts calculating the number of detainees who did not leave their pods for at least 24 consecutive hours during filming. Each time, Defendants have pointed out inaccuracies in those charts, and Plaintiffs now concede that the DC5 logs, alone, are insufficient to establish numerosity of this subclass. (See Pls.’ Status Report 8/2/20 [388].) As with Subclass 1(a), individual questions regarding why a particular detainee did not leave his or her pod abound. Because Plaintiffs cannot prove their claims with common evidence, the court denies certification of this subclass.

For Class 3, common questions predominate over individual inquiries because Plaintiffs can rely on pod population records for evidence that pod populations increased during filming. (See PSOAF ¶¶ 41.) In turn, Plaintiffs can rely on the expert reports to establish that such overcrowding may have caused harm. Again, Defendants will be free to demonstrate that Dixon’s breach did not proximately cause the alleged overcrowding and that such overcrowding did not compromise detainees' safety. (See Defs.' Opp'n to Renewed Mot. at 40–41.)

The elements of a claim for breach of fiduciary duty for restitution under Illinois law are similar to but distinct from a claim for damages. Instead of showing that the breach proximately caused damages to the plaintiff, a plaintiff must show that the breach benefitted the fiduciary. See Pro-Pac Inc., 721 F.3d at 787 (quoting Restatement (Third) of Restitution & Unjust Enrichment § 43). Plaintiffs argue that they will offer common evidence that Defendant Dixon received quantifiable benefits from the breach, including autographed photographs from Empire stars and a director's chair. (Renewed Mot. at 32.) Defendants argue that restitution is unavailable as a remedy, but it is unclear if they are referring solely to restitution flowing from the Fox Defendants' alleged inducement of a breach. (See Opp'n to Renewed Mot. at 41.) Because the court has granted summary judgment to the Fox Defendants on the inducement count, Plaintiffs may seek restitution only from the County Defendants. The amount of such restitution may be de minimis, but the court concludes that common questions predominate for this aspect of their restitution claim.

Superiority

Rule 23(b)(3) requires that proceeding as a class action under this provision be “superior to other available methods for fairly and efficiently adjudicating the controversy.” FED. R. CIV. P. 23(b)(3). Courts consider the following factors:

- (A) the class members' interests in individually controlling the prosecution or defense of separate actions;
- (B) the extent and nature of any litigation concerning the controversy already begun by or against class members;
- (C) the desirability or undesirability of concentrating the litigation of the claims in the particular forum; and
- (D) the likely difficulties in managing a class action.

Id. Plaintiffs argue that Rule 23(b)(3)(A)–(C) all weigh in favor of proceeding as a class action. (Renewed Mot. at 33.) Specifically, a class action will enable detainees to pursue many small claims together and avoid repeated litigation of threshold issues, such as whether Dixon owed detainees a fiduciary duty. See Chi. Tchrs. Union, 797 F.3d at 433 (“The purpose of class action litigation is to avoid repeated litigation of the same issue and to facilitate prosecution of claims that any one individual might not otherwise bring on her own.”). Plaintiffs are also unaware of any additional litigation pertaining to the conduct at issue in this case. Defendants’ brief implicitly raises Rule 23(b)(3)(D), the likely difficulties in managing a class action, as a reason to deny certification, but they otherwise do not challenge superiority. The court concludes that Plaintiffs have satisfied superiority for the remaining classes and subclasses.

3. Rule 23(b)(1)(B)

The court may certify a class under Rule 23(b)(1)(B) if “prosecuting separate actions . . . would create a risk of adjudications with respect to individual class members that, as a practical matter, would be dispositive of the interests of the other members not parties to the individual adjudications or would substantially impair or impede their ability to protect their interests.” FED. R. CIV. P. 23(b)(1)(B). Plaintiffs argue that Rule 23(b)(1)(B) certification is appropriate for their claims against the Fox Defendants (Count VIII for tortious inducement of a breach of fiduciary duty and Count XIII for unjust enrichment). In their renewed motion for class certification, Plaintiffs clarify that they are not seeking certification of this class in the alternative; instead, they believe that Rule 23(b)(1)(B) is preferable to Rule 23(b)(3) for their unjust enrichment claims. (Renewed Mot. at 34.) Because the court has granted Defendants’ motion for summary judgment on the inducement and unjust enrichment claims against the Fox Defendants, the court need not consider whether certification under Rule 23(b)(1)(B) would be appropriate here.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the court grants in part and denies in part Defendants' motions for summary judgment [361, 409, 411], grants Plaintiffs' Motion to Amend [365], and grants in part and denies in part Plaintiffs' renewed motion for class certification [351]. The following classes and subclasses are certified under Rule 23(b)(3): Subclass 1(c), Subclass 1(d), Subclass 1(e), and Class 3. Although the only remaining claims are state law claims, the court will exercise its discretion to retain jurisdiction of those claims. Plaintiffs are directed, within 21 days, to prepare and submit a proposed class certification order consistent with this opinion. The court encourages the parties to consider the possibility of settlement in light of the narrowed scope of the litigation.
